Native Secretary's Office,
Wellington, 29th January, 1868.

THE following Memorandum by Dr. Cusack on the epidemic of measles, is published for general information.

J. C. RICHMOND.

MEMORANDUM BY DR. CUSACK ON THE EPIDEMIC OF MEASLES AMONG THE NATIVES.

Having undertaken, on behalf of the Medical Board, to furnish such information on the present epidemic of measles as may be useful to the Native Department, it will be convenient—First: To give a short history of the disease as it appeared in July and August last among the Natives in the Nelson District, in language sufficiently free from technicalities to be understood by the officers of the Native Department. Second: To give an outline for the use of the Natives of the kind of treatment which my experience of that epidemic leads me to believe will be most useful and available in future similar attacks.

First: Last spring a number of Natives were assembled in Nelson on some land question, they were very closely crowded together, and one hundred and twenty of them contracted measles, which was then prevalent in the town, and came under my care. A return of their names and the duration of the disease in each case was furnished by me to the Nelson branch of the Native Department. The disease commenced with lassitude, cold in the eyes and nostrils, and similar symptoms to those experienced by Europeans. In those with a very dark skin the rash was not very distinguishable, but in the majority it was plainly visible, and in nearly all could be seen in the mouth and throat. In about eighty-five per cent., it ran a very rapid and favourable course. In about fifteen per cent., it extended either to the digestive organs, causing pain and diarrhoea, or to the air passages, causing bronchitis or inflammation of the lungs. All, however, excepting one who became consumptive, recovered, and are, so far as I can trace them now, well.

For treatment, the chief reliance was placed on constant and judicious nourishment; they were advised to discontinue their ordinary dietary of shell fish and potatoes, and were amply provided with meat, from which they were directed to prepare beef tea or mutton broth, a small cup of which was to be taken every two hours during the first invasion and feverish stage of the disease until the tongue became clean and there was a craving for and capacity of digesting solid food. As medicine, they were given twenty (20) drops of dilute Muriatic Acid (as sold at all chemists) in a wineglass of water four times a day, to which was added, in cases of painful diarrhoea, fifteen (15) drops, and, in cases of bronchitis, five (5) drops of Tincture of Opium (Laudanum). In some cases, it was found convenient to supply them with Tooth's Extract of Meat from which to make beef tea, and they readily understood its use, and it was found most efficacious. A few of them, who had not come early under treatment, fell into low fever and required a moderate amount (six ounces daily) of wine. All, excepting one lad who became consumptive, recovered, and I attribute this recovery, and the absence of a low or typhoid state, to the systematic use of continuous liquid nourishment. They were all fairly supplied with warm clothing of their own, but it was impossible to avoid overcrowding or place them in a perfectly favourable sanitary state.

Two very important inferences arise from a consideration of the late Nelson epidemic.

First: That a febrile epidemic (such as measles) need not necessarily act more unfavourably on Natives than Europeans.

Second: That when an epidemic of one of the Enanthemata (diseases attended with rashes, such as measles, scarlatina, smallpox, &c.) does affect an aboriginal population severely its severity may be due, not as has hitherto been supposed to any intrinsic weakness in the individuals, but possibly to bad food, or perhaps absolute deprivation of any nourishment which the stomach can digest—a cause often in operation and producing most fatal results in highly civilized communities.

From the above observations it will be seen that the treatment of measles is very simple, and the following very brief rules for its treatment will convey every information of use to non-medical persons.

Rules for the treatment of Measles and other febrile Epidemics among the Natives.

1. Measles is a contagious or catching disease, and, during its prevalence, communication between infected and healthy communities should if possible be prevented.

2. When the disease is prevalent, if any one (who has not previously had it) is taken with pains in the limbs and head, and watering of the eyes and nose, and feels sick and weak, he is probably taking the disease.

3. When a person is thought to have the disease he should avoid everything depressing, such as starvation, long walking, or over-fatigue; he should be warmly clothed so as not to feel cold, and should take liquid nourishment such as beef tea, mutton broth, or extract of meat, every two or three hours in small quantities so as to maintain his strength and be able to go through the disease without falling into a state of debility, the stomach at this time not being able to digest vegetable food excepting perhaps a little bread or corn flour.

4. If No. 3 recommendations are carried out early there will probably be no subsequent state of great debility, but if great prostration does occur, in addition to the beef tea, a wineglass of wine should be given three or four times a day.

5. Medical treatment is not required in the generality of cases, but twenty (20) drops of the dilute Muriatic Acid, of the chemists' shops, in a wineglass of water three or four times a day makes an agreeable cooling medicine and lessens the liability to diarrhoea or bronchitis. If diarrhoea does occur, fifteen (15) drops of Laudanum (Ti. Opii) may be added to each dose, or, if bronchitis, five (5) drops: in the absence of a medical man other medicines had better not be tried.

6. When convalescence sets in, the patient may return gradually to his usual diet, but if the convalescence is slow and debility continues, three or four (3 or 4) grains of Quinine may be added to each dose of the medicine.

7. The above doses are intended for average adults; to infants, under twelve months, three (3) drops of the acid and one (1) drop of Laudanum may be given in a little sugar and water if there be diarrhoea, and, if debility, half a wineglass of wine in the course of the twenty-four hours. These doses are to be increased, according to the age of the child, up to the full adult dose.

NOTICE to all persons having dealings with Natives in Native Land.—Purchasers, lessees, and others having dealings with aboriginal natives in respect of lands, the titles to which have passed through the Native Land Court, are hereby warned that all transfers of estates and interests so derived are invalid until the duty payable under the fifty-fifth section of "The Native Lands Act, 1865," has been paid, and the Colonial Treasurer's receipt endorsed upon the deed.

With as little delay as possible after execution of the deed of assurance, it should be presented for assessment at the Registry of Deeds for the Province in which the lands are situate accompanied by an affidavit of the transferee, his solicitor, or some other person competent to speak to the facts, stating that the full consideration money directly or indirectly paid on the transaction is expressed in the deed. Any deception or concealment in this respect will subject the parties to severe penalties.

On being satisfied that the true consideration is expressed, the Registrar will certify the amount of duty payable on the transaction. The deed together with the Registrar's certificate should then be presented at the Treasury, and the amount of the assessment paid. The Treasurer will endorse his receipt upon the deed after which it may be registered upon payment of the usual fees.
