Inquiry into Collision between Steamers "Wellington" and "Macgregor" confirmed.

Marine Department,
Wellington, 20th June, 1885.

HIS Excellency the Governor has been pleased, in pursuance of the provisions of section 244 of "The Shipping and Seamen's Act, 1877," to confirm the report of the Court of Inquiry into the collision between the steamers "Wellington" and "Macgregor," by which the New Zealand Certificate of Competency as Master, Home Trade No. 5199, held by Samuel Stephenson, the mate of the former vessel, is suspended for three months, from the 10th instant. The collision occurred off Kawau Island, at 9.45 p.m. on the 4th ultimo.

W. J. M. LARNACH.

I AM of opinion that the masters of both ships are free from blame, and their certificates will be returned. I am also of opinion that the mate of the "Macgregor" followed the rule of the road, and therefore is to be exonerated from blame. I think he ought to have been able to see the masthead-light of the "Wellington" at an earlier period than after passing the Nelson Rock, but his failing to do so in no way contributed to the casualty. He appears to have seen the "Wellington's" side-lights in ample time, and was fully justified in porting his helm. I think also that no blame can be attached to the engineers of the "Macgregor," and, in my opinion, a telegraph to the engine-room would not have given any additional assistance in avoiding a collision. The evidence of the witnesses from the "Macgregor" seems to me to be substantially accurate. It appears that the "Macgregor," after steering a S. $\frac{1}{2}$ E. course towards the Nelson Rock, altered her course to S. $\frac{1}{2}$ W. on rounding the rock, it being a quarter of a mile distant, and soon after to S. by W. From this position a vessel steering N. or N. $\frac{1}{2}$ W., as the "Wellington" was, would show both side-lights to the "Macgregor," and the porting of the helm would be a proper action on the part of the "Macgregor." I think the estimate of distance (about half a mile) given by the mate and master of the "Macgregor" as the distance between the two vessels, when the order was given to port, is more in accordance with the other ascertained facts of the case than the smaller estimate—six or seven ships' lengths, i.e., something less than quarter of a mile—given by the mate of the "Wellington." The effect of porting the "Macgregor's" helm, as seen from the "Wellington," would be ultimately to show the "Macgregor's" red light, though I think her red light must have been visible to the "Wellington" at an earlier period, and therefore at a greater distance than is alleged by the mate of the "Wellington." If the mate is correct in stating that he continued to see the green light of the "Macgregor" until the vessels were less than a quarter of a mile apart, the "Wellington's" lights must have been visible to the "Macgregor" on the starboard bow, or else one or both of the vessels must have been considerably out of her course. I see no reason, however, for rejecting the evidence of the "Macgregor" that the "Wellington" was on her port bow, and therefore come to the conclusion that at some time both of the "Macgregor's" lights were visible to the "Wellington," and ultimately the red light alone, and that in all probability at a distance sufficient to avoid all danger if the "Wellington" had been properly handled. One of the Nautical Assessors has prepared a diagram showing the relative positions of the vessels according to the different statements of the witnesses, which leads inevitably, to my mind, to this conclusion. I am of opinion that the mate of the "Wellington" is substantially accurate in his evidence as to the order of events, viz., that he saw first the masthead-light of the "Macgregor," then the green light—whether so much on the starboard bow as he alleges seems doubtful (if it were one and a half points on the bow, it is difficult to see any reason for starboarding half a point), and ultimately the red light, and that he then, or soon after, put his helm hard-a-starboard; but I place no value upon his estimate of time. I think starboarding his helm, in the circumstances, was an error on his part. It seems to me, in fact, the one course of conduct most likely to bring about a collision. Even assuming his estimate of the distance between the two vessels when the "Macgregor" showed her red light to be correct, I think a collision might have been avoided by proper precautions.

Had he stopped the engines without altering the helm, the "Macgregor" might have gone across his bows. Had he stopped and gone full speed astern, the chance of her doing so would have been materially increased. If, in addition to that, he had ported his helm, I think it is almost morally certain that the ships would have gone clear. The effect of starboarding, on the contrary, was that the "Wellington" followed the "Macgregor" up when the latter vessel was under a port helm, and thus a collision was rendered inevitable. The result, therefore, is that, in my opinion, the mate of the "Wellington" was in default: First, in not stopping and reversing his engines; second, in not porting instead of starboarding his helm: and that the collision came about solely in consequence of his default. His certificate will be suspended for three months.

Given under my hand this tenth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at Auckland, New Zealand.

Resident Magistrate.
