Imperial Institute.—School of Modern Oriental Studies.

Education Department,
Wellington, 6th September, 1889.

BY direction of His Excellency the Governor the following letter and enclosure are published for general information.

THOS. FERGUS,
(For the Minister of Education.)

1, Adam Street, Adelphi, London, W.C.,
5th July, 1889.

SIR,—I have the honour, by direction of His Royal Highness the President, to call your attention to a School of Modern Oriental Studies which has been established by the Imperial Institute, in union with University College and King's College, London, and to request that your Excellency will have the goodness to use your influence in bringing it under the notice of those who are likely to have cause to proceed from your colony to England with the intention of pursuing studies of the nature included within the scope of this school.—I have, &c.,

F. A. ABEL,
Organizing Secretary.

His Excellency the Governor of New Zealand, Wellington.

SCHOOL FOR MODERN ORIENTAL STUDIES, established by the Imperial Institute of the United Kingdom, the Colonies, and India, in union with University College and King's College, London.

THE commercial and official classes in the United Kingdom, whose pursuits entail either temporary residence in, or visits to, oriental countries, and communion or correspondence with the natives of those countries, have long experienced the want of facilities which might be afforded by a sufficiently-comprehensive public institution, where a practical and colloquial acquaintance with the more important modern oriental languages might be acquired.

In France, Germany, and Austria-Hungary there exists institutions of magnitude and importance for affording instruction in the spoken and written oriental dialects and in matters relating to the history, commerce, and political economy of the countries in which those languages are spoken.

In France the School of Living Oriental Languages, which was founded nearly 100 years ago, receives from the State the free use of a large building and a grant of over £6,000 per annum; gratuitous instruction is there given in the chief modern oriental languages, and a commercial section has recently been added to it by the Minister of Public Instruction.

The Imperial Oriental Academy of Vienna has long been of world-wide celebrity, and has greatly contributed to the extension of commerce in Austria-Hungary, whilst in Berlin the Imperial German School of Living Oriental Languages, established a year ago upon a very important footing, has already received considerable development. This school is supported by an annual subvention of £3,600, and the tuition there is entirely gratuitous.

Although the scope of action of the Imperial Institute, as defined by its charter, does not embrace the exercise of actual educational functions, its governing body has considered that the creation and development of an organization for providing, in the United Kingdom, the important aid to the official and commercial sections of the community which is furnished to continental nations by such establishments as above named, might prove a work of considerable utility.

There have existed at University College and at King's Colleges, since their foundation, professorships of certain oriental languages: the Indian School of University College on the one hand, and the Oriental Section of King's College on the other, have accomplished useful work in the preparation of candidates for the Indian Civil Service and other Government departments, by affording facilities for the study of some of the eastern languages.

The Committee of the Institute having met with a cordial response from the Councils of the two Colleges to a proposal to consolidate the work of this nature now being performed there, and to bring it into harmonious working with a scheme for affording practical instruction in other important oriental languages, now desire to direct attention to the results of a careful consideration of the whole subject by a Special Committee, appointed by them for that purpose, which includes representatives of the Councils of University and King's Colleges, and of which the following are the members:—

Sir Frederick Abel, C.B., D.C.L., D.Sc., F.R.S. (Chairman); Colonel Sir Edward Bradford, K.C.S.I.; Sir Francis Dillon Bell, K.C.M.G., C.B.; Colonel Sir Charles Wilson, R.E., K.C.B., K.C.M.G.; Sir Thomas Wade, G.C.M.G., K.C.B.; Major-General Sir Frederic Goldsmid, K.C.S.I., C.B.; Sir Philip Magnus; Major C. M. Watson, R.E., C.M.G.; Sir George Young, Bart., LL.D., and Professor Henry Morley, LL.D. (nominated by the Council of University College); the Rev. Henry Wach, D.D., and Professor R. K. Douglas (nominated by the Council of King's College).

Arrangements have been completed by this Committee, and approved of by the governing bodies of the Imperial Institute and of the two Colleges, for the organization of a school in London, designed both for giving instruction in modern oriental languages, and also for the pursuit of studies relating to the history, literature, commercial and physical geography, political economy, and the natural and industrial resources of the countries and districts in which the various languages are used.

It is in contemplation to arrange for the delivery of special lectures, or courses of lectures, from time to time, in connection with the school, by experts or specialists in any of the foregoing subjects.

This school will be carried on under the immediate direction of the Committee above specified.

The classes which the School of Modern Oriental Studies comprises are divided under two heads:—

Division I. includes classes for all oriental languages especially required by students qualifying for examinations for the Indian Civil Service, the instruction being of the same character as that provided for some time past at University College and at King's College.

These classes will, from the commencement of the autumn term of 1889, be continued at University College, and will be conducted under regulations common to the other classes which combine with them to constitute the general school.

This division includes instruction in Sanscrit, Bengali, Hindi, Hindustani, Tamil, Telugu, Punjabi, Pali, Marathi, Gujarati, Arabic, and Persian.

Division II. consists mainly of classes for modern oriental languages other than the Indian languages.

The courses of tuition will be of a practical rather than of an academic character; they will have particular reference to commercial and official requirements, and to the facilitation of colloquial intercourse with natives of oriental countries.

It is in contemplation, so soon as the number of students warrants the expenditure, to secure the services of native readers and teachers of conversation in connection with the classes of this division.

The languages to be taught in Division II. comprise colloquial Arabic, modern Greek, colloquial Persian, Russian, Turkish, Chinese, Burmese, Japanese, Malay, and Swaheli.

The classes under this division will be conducted at King's College, where arrangements will also be made for the establishment of evening classes.

The names of instructors and the places where various classes will be held are given below.

There will be three terms of about ten weeks in each year, as follows: Autumn term, commencing about the beginning of October; spring term, commencing about the middle of January; summer term, commencing early in May.

The school will open with the autumn term of 1889.

A fee of three guineas per term will have to be paid in advance by each student for each language taken up for instruction. This payment will entitle the student to the use, within the Colleges, of text-books, dictionaries, and works of reference required in connection with the particular language taught, and to the use of all the facilities which it is proposed to secure in the development of the school.

Accommodation will be provided to enable students to pursue their studies at hours when the classes are not held.

The libraries of both Colleges will be open to students in any of the classes of the school during the usual hours of study.

Intending students should communicate with the Organizing Secretary, at the offices of the Imperial Institute, 1, Adam Street, Adelphi, London, W.C., where the registration of students will take place, and where all information regarding the school will be supplied.

F. A. ABEL,

Secretary of the Imperial Institute.
