SUMMARY FOR THE MONTH OF APRIL, 1920.

April proved a dull and wet month, most parts of the Dominion experiencing a total rainfall considerably above the mean of previous years. The Gisborne and Hawke's Bay districts, and scattered places on the Canterbury Plains, were the only parts recording a deficiency.

During the first six days anticyclonic pressure dominated, and fine weather prevailed generally. On the 7th and 8th a small westerly disturbance ruled in conjunction with a depression in the North, and a severe southerly gale raged about Cook Strait. Considerable rain also fell, especially over the North Island. Westerly low-pressure areas were somewhat frequent, though not of marked intensity, and were responsible for copious rainfall, particularly in districts having a westerly aspect.
