SUMMARY FOR THE MONTH OF JUNE, 1923.

Except for one short period, between the 5th and 8th, anticyclonic pressure was almost entirely absent over the Dominion during the month of June, and the barometer was continuously below normal owing to numerous disturbances of both tropical and antarctic origin.

The effects of these disturbances were most markedly shown in the northern and west coast portions of the North Island, and in Otago and, to a less extent, Westland in the South Island. All these districts recorded a total rainfall above the average, while the east coast districts, particularly of the South Island, experienced a deficiency, with fair weather and an absence of high winds.

Snow fell on several days in the high country, and the southern hills were covered to a greater extent than is usual under normal winter conditions.

D. C. BATES, Director.
