SUMMARY FOR THE MONTH OF DECEMBER, 1930.

General.—Once again the Dominion as a whole experienced a cold month, the December mean temperature at many of the climatological stations being the lowest since meteorological observations were commenced. Except for the brief stormy period from the 15th to the 17th, however, the month was not a particularly unsettled one, but from its commencement until the 18th cloudy skies were much in evidence. After the 19th, warmer weather set in, and Christmas week was the warmest period experienced so far this summer, almost perfect summer weather continuing from then to the close of the month.

Owing to the coldness and low rainfall growth of vegetation was again backward, and small fruit was slow in ripening. In the hill country of the east coast district, especially, grass on which stock was grazing made little headway. On the other hand, the warm dry spell towards the close of the month enabled farmers to harvest their hay crops under favourable conditions. Generally, stock have kept in good condition.

Rainfall.—Rainfall was below the average over the whole of the Dominion, except at a few places in the extreme south of the South Island. The deficit was considerable in nearly all districts, but greatest in the Bay of Plenty, Gisborne, and Hawke's Bay districts of the North Island and the Nelson and Westland provinces of the South. At Tauranga, the total month's fall was only 15 points against the December average of 375 points.

Weather and Pressure Systems.—During the month no depressions of marked intensity crossed the Dominion, and nowhere did the barometer fall below 29-50 inches. Pressure was, therefore, nearly everywhere above the December average.

From the 1st to the 13th an anticyclone remained practically stationary over the Tasman Sea, while there was a persistent tendency for low pressure to the east of New Zealand. As a consequence, the general trend of wind was from the south, although occasionally northerlies prevailed, more especially through Cook Strait. The weather during this period was mainly fair though cloudy, and temperatures remained unseasonably cool.

On the night of the 12th a small depression crossed the Dominion, and by the morning of the 13th a slight secondary centre had developed off the west coast of the South Island. The latter passed rapidly in the vicinity of Cook Strait, and the fresh southerly winds in its rear were accompanied by light rain in most districts. At Wellington, however, a heavy fall of 175 points occurred, which was more than half the total recorded for the whole month.

On the 15th another depression moved on to the Dominion and, after passing eastward during the night, it became very intense. As a result a severe southerly storm set in which continued until the 17th. The night of the 15th was a most unpleasant one, a violent southerly gale blowing at many places. The worst effects of the storm were felt in the east coast districts, and in the Canterbury Province particularly. Rain fell in nearly all districts, with some scattered heavy falls, though precipitation was chiefly a showery nature. Hail showers were also experienced at places, and some of the mountains received a heavy coating of snow. On the Tararuas the snow came lower down than at any time since August. The damage, however, was not considerable. Some losses of newly-shorn sheep occurred and fruit crops suffered somewhat in the eastern districts.

After the disappearance eastwards of this storm area on the 18th, the weather became generally more settled and, except for a few isolated light showers on the 21st, 24th, 28th, and 29th, associated with slight low-pressure waves passing to the south of the Dominion, the weather continued fine until the end of the month.
