NOTE.—At stations where departures from normal are in parentheses the record has been maintained for less than ten years in the case of temperatures and for less than twenty years in the case of rainfall and the normals are partly interpolated.

NOTES ON THE WEATHER DURING APRIL, 1943

General Notes.—April, like March, was a dry, sunny month in which several anti-cyclonic systems crossed directly over the New Zealand area, giving fine, clear conditions. Pasture grass is very short between Gisborne and Canterbury, with some very bare areas about the Wairarapa. The soil in several cases has been too hard for deep cultivation. In other areas there was sufficient rain to stimulate growth, and in gardens supplied with adequate moisture the season has been prolonged a month later than usual.

Rainfall.—There was a marked deficiency of rainfall, especially over the southern half of the North Island and in eastern districts of the South. Compared with average values the totals were lowest between Masterton and Timaru. In the Wairarapa this follows an exceptionally low March rainfall and a fairly dry regime previously. North of Whangarei and, largely as the result of one day's heavy rain, in a region Taupo, Opotiki, East Cape, and Gisborne falls exceeded the average. Slight surpluses occurred also in parts of Nelson, Northern Otago, and the extreme south-west.

Temperatures.—East of the ranges temperatures were about normal, but elsewhere they tended to be rather below. Most days were mild, but calm nights gave low minimum temperatures, and while frosts were numerous these were less severe than usual. Very little snow fell on the ranges, the chief occasion being on the 25th and 26th.

Sunshine.—Sunshine exceeded the average almost generally and approached or passed record values at a number of stations, with totals of forty to sixty hours above the average. It was probably the sunniest April for the whole country for several decades. Wanganui had an exceptionally high duration of 230 hours.

Weather sequence.—On the 1st and 2nd a tropical cyclone moved southward, passing west of Cape Reinga and decreasing in activity as it crossed the North Island. Near the centre north-easterlies reached gale force, and considerable rain fell in the Auckland Province and moderate falls extended to beyond Cook Strait. On the 3rd south-westerlies followed a cold front, and after a few showers conditions improved as an anticyclone extended over New Zealand. The weather became less settled on the 8th with cloud increasing. A trough passed on the 9th and 10th, north-westerly winds freshening before changing to south-westerlies. Moderate to heavy rain fell in south-western districts, but elsewhere falls were lighter and more scattered.

A new anticyclone was over New Zealand on the 11th, with mainly fine weather. Behind a rapidly weakening disturbance another anticyclone was built up, and settled conditions continued till the 14th, when a deepening depression from the Kermadec Island region gave heavy rain in the Gisborne - East Cape area, but mainly clear weather persisted elsewhere. The depression moved to the north of Chatham Islands, while an intense anticyclone previously over New Zealand was to the south-east.

On the 15th a low-pressure trough advanced from the west, and until the 18th a complex but fairly weak disturbance affected the country. Winds were mainly light with cloudy skies and, on the 17th, foggy conditions. The rain was very scattered and mostly light.

On the 20th a passing disturbance gave a few showers, especially in the west of the South Island. From the 21st to the 24th there was a very deep low in the far southern Tasman Sea with westerly winds freshening at times. While the weather was fine and mild in the east there were occasional showers in the west, these being heaviest south of Greymouth. The centre of a depression advancing from the north-west crossed the South Island on the 25th and moved to the south of the Chatham Islands. There were north-westerly gales which changed to strong south-westerlies. Rain became fairly general and temperatures cooler, some snow falling in the southern ranges.

Conditions were improving on the 26th, and on the next day an anticyclone was over New Zealand. Fine weather with little wind prevailed therefore, and nights were cool. A depression to the north, however, gave cloudy conditions over the Auckland Peninsula, and on the 30th, with the anticyclone moving eastward and the depression approaching, easterlies became strong and rain occurred north of Auckland. Morning fogs were prevalent on the east coast of the South Island, but later a cold front advanced from the south-west and brought a few showers.
