In amplification of these regulations this appendix sets forth the general principles of professional conduct and practice in the relations of architects with other architects, with engineer consultants, with clients whom they serve, and with master builders and other contractors in the building trade who undertake their work. Such general principles include more specific instances of their application.

The principles enunciated in this appendix are 'the Fundamental Rules' of the Institute referred to in regulations Nos. 28 to 31 inclusive and shall be binding on every member of the Institute. The statement of the rights, duties, obligations, or responsibilities herein set forth shall not be construed as a limitation of other equally applicable principles not specifically included herein. Such instances of principles not specifically covered may be dealt with by the Council under the circumstances of each case; particular notice being taken of any departure from or failure to comply with the specific provisions as given in the mandatory clauses of this Code, which are numbered 3 to 9 (both inclusive), 11, 14, 15, 18 to 23 (both inclusive), 26, 27 (d), 29, and 30 in Section 1 and upon evidence of the breach of which, the Council may have investigation made and may take such action as in the regulations provided.

(Whilst compliance with all the provisions of the Code is required of all members, it is obvious that no action could be taken in regard to non-compliance with general principles mentioned in the preceding paragraph or with lack of attention to matters of good taste. A portion of a clause shown in parentheses is for the guidance of members rather than being of a mandatory nature.)

SECTION I

The Professional Status of the Architect and His Relation to Other Architects

1. Function: General—The function of the architect is to design buildings, determine their arrangement, proportions, and mode of construction; to make provision for all necessary services; to arrange for their construction and to supervise the work of their construction and their fittings; to control the payments made, and, where necessary, to check the cost of the work.

In carrying out this function he obtains where necessary the services of consultants, master builders, subcontractors, craftsmen, quantity surveyors, and clerks of works, as the nature of the work may require.

2. Professional Status—He practises a profession, which is not compatible with that of a building contractor or of a supplier of goods or materials used in construction.

3. Charges Sole Remuneration—He is remunerated solely by the charges which he makes to his clients for the services which he renders in a strictly fiduciary manner.

4. Non-receipt of Commissions, etc.—He does not accept any trade commissions, discounts, rebates, allowances, or any trade profit on work which he designs or supervises, and avoids all operations which would result in the receipt by him of any such rebates or commissions.

5. Interest in Companies to be Disclosed—He will not, whilst acting in a professional capacity, be at the same time, without disclosing the fact to his clients, a director or a member of, or a shareholder in, or act as agent for any contracting or manufacturing company or insurance company or firm or business with which he may have to deal on behalf of his clients.

6. Royalties on Patents—He does not receive directly or indirectly any royalty or commission on any patented or protected material or process used on work being carried out for clients under his direction as architect, unless and until his acceptance of such royalty or commission has been authorised in writing by those clients.

7. Engagement in Callings not Consistent with Professional Status—An architect who for any reason becomes a contractor, assistant to a contractor, a clerk of works, or a builder's merchant, ceases to have the status of architect and ceases to use the title of architect. While so engaged such architect gives notice to the Institute of such change of status, applies for transfer to the special non-practising list, and undertakes not to practise as an architect in any capacity until he ceases such engagement.

8. The Builder as Client of an Architect—Where a master builder or construction company is the client of an architect for the design of a building, the architect is remunerated solely by his professional charges. He does not accept the position of sharing in the profits or losses resulting from the erection or sale of the building or other work, such being inconsistent with his professional status.

9. Offering Commission—He does not seek work by offering commissions or rebates on his charges to agents, managers or officials; nor does he offer any donation or subscription out of his charges to any person, company, public body, or institution employing him by way of rebate on such charges.

10. Honorary Work—He does not undertake professional work in an honorary capacity, except for charitable purposes; in which case he should inform the secretary of his district branch or the secretary of the Institute. He does not offer or agree to give services gratuitously to any organisation or institution when such work is normally carried out by architects at usual charges. He does not accept such work with any proviso for a donation or a reduction of his charges.

11. Work of Unqualified Employees—He does not, where having the power to prevent it, permit any student, draughtsman, or other unqualified person to perform any of the duties of an architect, other than for his employer, directly or indirectly, or in any manner whatsoever opposed to the regulations. It is desirable that he ensures in the conditions of engagement of members on his staff that provision for control of such work is made and understood.

12. Undesired Clients—When he has a prospective client from whom he is not able or desirous to accept work, he ensures to the best of his ability that such client is introduced to a qualified architect with the intent that the work may be done by him.

13. Architect Assistants—When an architect employs as assistant a qualified architect, it is desirable that he should define clearly the position of the architect assistant in performing architectural services independent of his employment.

14. Admission to Partnership—A member does not allow any person, not being a member of the Institute to practise in his name as a Registered Architect; nor does he enter into partnership in his practice as a Registered Architect with any person who is not a fully qualified member of the Institute.

Provided that this shall not prevent a member from entering into partnership with a member of a kindred architectural institute or society, or with a qualified member of a kindred profession, approved as such in either case of the Council of the Institute. Provided also that in entering into such a partnership the description of the firm accords with the actual qualifications of the several partners and does not imply that all the qualifications mentioned are held by each one of the partners.

15. Participation in Profits—A member does not allow or agree to allow of participation by any person other than a partner, in the profits accruing from his practice; but this shall not be deemed to prevent a member awarding a bonus to any employee, whether as a fixed sum or as a percentage of profits.

16. Not a Medium for Payment—An architect does not, unless specially requested in writing by a client, act as the medium for payments made on behalf of his clients; but only issues certificates or recommendations for payments by his clients for building work carried out.

17. Agency of Architect—An architect in practice acts as the agent of his client in regard to the preparation of design and specifications and the calling and acceptance of tenders. From the date of any contract for work the architect, whilst still acting as agent for his client in the selection and design of fittings and details, becomes a 'quasi-arbitrator' in all matters between his client and the contractor; and in such capacity must act with impartiality in approving or in certifying work or payments therefor.

18. Guarantee of Estimates or Quantities—An architect does not guarantee any estimate or contract sum by personal bond, nor shall he be a party to any building contract except as owner, in which case it is desirable that he should nominate a member of the Institute to act as referee in any matter which might involve dispute between him and a contractor.

He does not guarantee quantities supplied to clients by himself or by any other person in connection with any contract in which he is architect. If the architect supplies quantities he does not secure payment for such work from the building contractor.

19. Engagement of Consultants—He does not, when engaging consultants, enter into any agreement whereby the services performed by such consultants are to be paid from moneys payable through the building contractor.

Provided that in the case of some patented material or special process in which the efficiency of the service depends upon specialist technical services, the cost of which is included in the price tendered by a subcontractor, it shall be permissible to use such material or engage such service with the written consent of the client or by notice in writing given by the architect to the client.

20. Submitting Proposals Without Instructions—An architect does not submit to a person or body sketches, designs, plans, estimates, or proposals for building alterations or additions to buildings without having received proper authority and instructions to do so by such person or body. He does not offer drawings or other services on approval except at the request of a client; nor does he offer such without adequate remuneration. He does not by such methods or otherwise seek out a possible client as such action tends to decrease the value placed upon the knowledge and training of architects in general. He does not attempt as a matter of self-interest to influence the decision of a person or body in the projected appointment of an architect, by suggesting that a private or public competition for the work be held.

21. Competing on Charges—An architect does not compete in the amount of his charges or offer or consent to work for less than the scale charge; nor does he directly or indirectly, either personally or by means of an agent or otherwise, endeavour to supplant another architect who has been previously employed by any person or body or after definite steps have been taken by such person or body to employ another architect.

22. Replacing Previous Architect—An architect, on receiving instructions to proceed with certain work or with additions or alterations to certain work which was previously entrusted to another architect, shall before proceeding with such work, communicate with the architect previously employed and inquire and ensure that his engagement has been properly terminated and that his reasonable charges have been paid:

If he is called upon to accept such appointment or such client as the result of the death, resignation or dismissal of an architect previously appointed he regards himself as the guardian of the honour and interests of any predecessor who has honourably and faithfully performed his functions as an architect.

23. Competition—(1) In regard to architectural competitions, an architect does not:

- (a) Submit designs in any publicly promoted competition not in accord with the Regulations for Architectural Competitions (Appendix L) of the Regulations of the Institute or in any such competition banned by the Council or Executive Committee.
- (b) Attempt, except as a bona fide competitor, to secure work for which a competition has been decided upon or organised.
- (c) Attempt to influence any award in a competition.
- (d) Accept the work if he has acted in an advisory position to the promoters.

- (e) After employment as a professional adviser to the promoters or an assessor or member of a jury of award, enter into partnership with or act as joint architect or in any consultative capacity with a successful competitor until such competitor has ceased to have any interest or remuneration to be secured from such work.
- (f) After acting as professional adviser, become eligible for employment in the carrying out of the work of either design or supervision except in so far as his appointment as professional adviser to the promoters may extend, as provided for in the Conditions of Competition.
- (2) An architect, if aware of any public competition being promoted, shall notify either the secretary of his district branch or the secretary of the Institute promptly.

24. Recognition and Respect to Fellow Architects—An architect accords to his fellow architects the recognition of their qualifications and training and accords respect to every architect honourably practising his profession.

25. Aid to Students—An architect employing in his practice or in his official appointment having under his direction students, draughtsmen, and assistants carrying out a stage of their professional training, gives them the aid of his experience and treats them with the consideration customary among members of the profession.

26. Salaried Architects—

- (a) An architect engaged in a salaried position, whether in an executive capacity or as an assistant architect, devotes the whole of his professional knowledge and ability in the service of his employer, whether such employer is a Government Department, a local or public body, or a private employer. In such capacity he does not compete with architects in independent practice by designing or carrying out work for persons other than the authority or employer whom he serves.
- (b) A salaried architect, engaged in a salaried position as above described, does not engage in any architectural work involving the design and supervision of building work other than for his employer, with or without remuneration, except with the consent of his employer, given generally or in respect of some particular work. It is desirable that the salaried architect receiving such consent should inform the secretary of his district branch or the secretary of the Institute of the fact.
- (c) It is desirable that an architect employed as a professor, lecturer, or instructor in any educational establishment having a course of architecture or in building, should be permitted as far as his official position and the terms of his engagement allow, to undertake architectural work in the design and supervision of building work, either solely or in partnership with an architect in independent practice.
- (d) A salaried architect may take part in public architectural competitions open to him and may receive any award or premium therefor; but he will refrain from submitting any entry in a competition relating to work on which he has been consulted in any way in his official capacity.
- (e) A salaried architect having been awarded the first premium in a competition does not (except with the consent of his employer) undertake to carry out the work. He has the alternative of resigning his appointment and entering into independent practice; or of arranging to act in collaboration with an architect in general practice to carry out the work.
- (f) The employment of salaried architects in work other than for their employers is in all cases subject to the following provisos:
- (i) That the work is not performed for lesser remuneration than the rates approved by the Institute in the Scale of Charges.
  - (ii) That architects employed in the function of inspecting and approving designs and specifications, of granting or recommending building permits or consents, or the expenditure of public funds or in the inspection of building work carried out under such permits or consents, do not in any case carry out work of design or supervision of building work outside their official functions, other than as provided for in clause 26 (b).

27. Publicity—The following is a guide to means of publicity to be afforded an architect:

- (a) It is reasonable that an architect should sign his buildings or have his name affixed thereto in an unostentatious manner, similar to that adopted by sculptors and other artists.
- (b) It is reasonable that an architect should have his name and designation and titles or initials thereof on a name plate at the entrance of a building in which his office is located, but the letters thereof should not exceed 2 in. in height.
- (c) It is desirable that architects should exhibit their names, titles, and designation on a board in front of a building being erected under their supervision provided that it is done in an unostentatious manner and the lettering is of reasonable height in relation to the position of the board.

- (d) An architect should not advertise in the public press or by any other method of direct advertisement, except by means of a professional card not exceeding two inches high and one column wide, giving the name, professional qualifications, designation, address, and telephone number, without further amplification; except that in the cases of commencement of practice, change of address, or change of personnel or of partnership of a practitioner or firm, the plain statement of the fact which causes the announcement may be made.

28. Illustrations of Work—It is desirable that when an illustration of a completed building or a projected building is published in a daily paper or a magazine or a book, the name of the architect who designed or supervised it should also be published under the illustration and that in any description of such a building, whether illustrated or not, the architect's name should be mentioned with some appreciation of the qualities of his work.

It is undesirable, however, that the name of the architect should be shown in an ostentatious manner or that fulsome praise should be accorded his work and that the architect should not be involved in supplying or in stimulating such announcements. An architect may provide a copy of a photograph for an illustration but he does not pay for the insertion either directly or by contributing the cost of the block or any other cost entailed therein.

29. Press Articles—It is desirable that architects should contribute articles or press correspondence on matters of building or architecture of interest or information to the general public, but such articles should be devoid of any implication that their purpose is less for public interest than for that of the author.

30. Broadcasting—It is desirable that informative broadcasts on building and architectural matters should be made from non-commercial radio stations from time to time; but such broadcasts should not convey the impression that the speaker is more concerned with eulogising his own work or ideas than with giving information of value to listeners.

If such informative broadcasts are made from commercial radio stations the architect giving or preparing the broadcast shall not make any payment therefor to the broadcasting authority, or its agent or another contributor; nor shall such broadcast consist of mention of the name of the architect or description of his work in such a manner that it could be regarded as an advertisement.

31. Criticism—An architect does not criticise in public print the professional conduct or work of another architect except over his own name in full or under the authority of a professional journal.

SECTION II

The Relation of the Architect to the Structural Engineer

1. Collaboration of Engineer Consultant—The architect who seeks the collaboration of a consulting structural engineer in the design or supervision of any work upon which he is engaged as architect accords to such engineer full recognition of his professional status in regard to such work, and consults him at such stages of the work as may achieve the maximum efficiency of design and construction.

2. Collaboration by Architect Consultant—When the services of an architect are sought by a structural or civil engineer in the design of a structure it is desirable that the architect should request and receive a similar recognition of professional status and that he should be brought into consultation at such stages of the work as may render his collaboration in the design of the work most effective.

3. Accrediting Work of Consultant—Drawings and specifications for work upon which the structural engineer acts as consultant to the architect, or the architect acts as consultant to the structural or civil engineer, should bear the name of the engineer or the architect consultant respectively. If any notice board be attached to such a structure in course of erection, or any illustration of it be published the name of the consultant engineer or architect should also appear thereon.

4. Basis of Remuneration—Unless the circumstances of the collaboration between the architect and the structural engineer vary from any basis of engagement laid down by current agreement between the Institute and the New Zealand Institution of Engineers, the architect or the engineer respectively shall receive from the party seeking their collaboration such charges for work in a consultative capacity as are from time to time agreed between the Institute and the Professional Engineers' Association.

SECTION III

The Duty of the Architect to His Clients

1. General Matters of Service—The architect serves his client, by devoting to him the benefit of the whole of his knowledge and experience in the study of schemes for the work he requires of him, in the direction and supervision of the building work and the advice and counsel which he gives to him. He is zealous in the interests which his client confides to him.

2. Transactions Injurious to Third Parties or not Legal—He does not countenance transactions which might be injurious to the rights or interests of third parties even if required to do so by his client.

He does not become involved in matters which are at variance with legal requirement or which compromise himself or third parties or any matter which may lead to accidents. In such cases he advises the client that he cannot give effect to the instructions received.

3. Remuneration by Charges Only—He is remunerated for his services by his client only. He receives no remuneration from any person who, as contractor or subcontractor, has entered directly or indirectly into an agreement with a client of the architect.

4. Increase in Cost—He warns his client when by modifications of the work proposed there is likely to be an increase of cost.

5. Advice on Statutory Obligations—He advises his client in regard to fire and earthquake insurance, employers' liability, third party risks, rights of adjoining owners, the provisions of the Liens Act under normal circumstances, and indicates to him when legal opinion is desirable.

6. Copies of Documents—If so requested by his client he hands him a copy of the contract documents of the working drawings and specifications used in carrying out the contract for record purposes. He retains his preliminary studies and detailed drawings and the contract document signed by the parties.

7. Selecting Fittings and Goods—He assists his client in the selection of fittings, in the ordering of goods requiring selection, and in determining the decorative finishes desired.

8. Architect's Control—He advises his client of the necessity for efficient performance and economy of the work, that all instructions to the contractor be given by him as architect, particularly in regard to any variations involving the cost of the work.

9. Variation Orders—He advises his client, when issuing any variation order, particularly one involving increase of cost, and obtains his authority for such increase whether or not the actual value of additional work is available at the time of the variation order.

10. Architect's Decisions to be Impartial—He advises his client that, in regard to any decision as to the interpretation of the contract or the general conditions, or the quality of the work, he is required to act with impartiality in just determination between the contracting parties.

11. Payment on Certificates Only—He warns his client to refrain from making any payment to a contractor, subcontractor or merchant whether at their request or otherwise, unless such payment is authorised by the certificate of the architect or, in particular circumstances, is made with his knowledge.

12. Cost Plus Profit Work—Where there is a contract for carrying out the work for a fixed sum, he warns his client of the disadvantage of ordering any additional but similar operations on the same work on the basis of cost plus profit.

13. Checking Statements and Issuing Certificates—He checks statements of accounts rendered by the contractor for the issue of progress payments from time to time and issues progress certificates based on such checked accounts. On receipt of the final statement by the contractor, he checks it, advises his client thereon and issues to the contractor a final certificate when the work and the maintenance thereof has been completed in accordance with the contract.

14. Appointment as Arbitrator—He declines to act as arbitrator, assessor, or valuer in a dispute in which one of his clients is involved. He also declines to act as arbitrator in a case in which he has already given an opinion on a subject for legal action.

SECTION IV

The Duty of the Architect Toward the Master Builders and Other Contractors and Persons Concerned With the Erection of Buildings

1. General—The architect uses his influence in all matters which affect those who carry out his instructions in the erection and fitting of the buildings and works he designs, to the intent and foresight in their preparation and the clarity of his plans and specifications may enable them to be fully understood by all concerned; that harmony and cordiality may prevail; and that honourable conduct shall govern their mutual relationship. He gives warning of any structure used or work performed during building operations which he considers dangerous to workmen or to third parties.

2. Non-acceptance of Commission—The architect is forbidden to receive from contractors and suppliers of material any discount, commission, or gift whether in money or in kind and whether or not such contractors or suppliers are engaged on the work.

3. Deposits with Tenders—When a monetary deposit is required from contractors to be lodged with tenders, the architect retains the money on behalf of his client and when either a tender is accepted and a contract is signed, or it has been decided not to accept any tender the architect, as provided by the conditions of tendering, promptly returns the deposits of the unsuccessful tenderers and retains that of the successful tenderer until adequate work on the contract has been performed. It is desirable that, if it be necessary to lodge any such deposits in a bank the amount should be placed in a trust account.

4. Supply of Drawings and Issue of Certificates—The architect endeavours to supply to the contractor any detailed drawing necessary with all reasonable promptitude so that work on the contract may not be delayed. He also endeavours to refrain from unnecessary delay in issuing certificates, checking accounts, and making inspections of work.

5. Variation Orders—When a variation in the contract has been required by the client or has been rendered necessary by some other cause, the architect issues a variation order as promptly as possible including therein, if it can be ascertained, the cost of adjustment which the variation involves.

6. Instructions to Contractor or Foreman—The architect refrains as far as circumstances permit from giving direct instructions to the workmen employed on the work and conveys his instructions to the contractor or to the foreman on the work. He does not, if he can avoid it, correct faulty work by discussing it before the workmen on the work and in their hearing.

7. Defects—An architect noticing any work to be defective calls the attention of the contractor or foreman to it promptly and does not delay condemning it till a stage of progress when it is more costly to remedy the defect.

8. Recognition of Good Workmanship—An architect inspecting work accords due praise to workmen who are producing good craftsmanship and mentions their capabilities to the contractor by whom they are employed.

9. Direct Control by Architect—The architect, when necessary, requests his client to order variation in the contract through him as architect and warns him of difficulties which may ensue if any such order or other direction is given by the client to the contractor, subcontractors or any of their employees; and he warns the contractor that any acceptance or continuance of acceptance of direct instructions from the client, tenants, or other parties should, in the interests of all concerned, be avoided.

10. Status of Quantity Surveyor and Clerk of Works—The architect accords full recognition of status of quantity surveyors, clerks of works, and technical consultants engaged in the work and supports them in the function in which they are rightfully engaged.

11. Notification of Financial Interest—The architect shall notify the contractor in the event of his having a financial interest in the contract."

I hereby certify that the foregoing regulations were duly made at a general meeting of members of the New Zealand Institute of Architects, held at Hanmer on 17 March 1955, and in compliance with the provisions of section 21 of The New Zealand Institute of Architects Act 1913.

F. H. HARRIS, Secretary of the Institute.
