Note—At stations where departures from normal have an asterisk, the temperature record has been maintained for less than 10 years, the rainfall record for less than 20 years. Rainfall normals have been revised and now refer to the standard period 1921–50. Where observations are not available for the whole period, or where the site of the rain gauge has been changed, the normals are partly interpolated.

Notes on the Weather for December 1960

General: December was a cool month, with a marked reversal General: December was a cool month, with a marked reversal of the usual patterns in rainfall and sunshine, so that Gisborne and Hawke's Bay were cloudy and wet while the West Coast was sunny and dry. This reversal was caused by persistent south-easterly winds during the first half of the month, with unusually cool temperatures, snow on the ranges of both Islands, and cloud and rain in eastern districts, while the West Coast basked in sunshine. For the greater part of the country conditions were considered to be somewhat too dry for satisfactory growth, affecting especially the hay crops. In a few areas, such as Bay of Plenty and parts of the Nelson district, the dry weather was becoming rather serious.

Rainfall: Rainfall was below average in the South Island (except

Rainfall: Rainfall was below average in the South Island (except for the Kaikoura coast and most of Canterbury), and in the North Island west of the main ranges. In most of these areas it was about half; but in parts of North Taranaki, Southern Manawatu, the Marlborough Sounds, north-west Nelson, Buller, Westland, and Central Otago it was less than a quarter of average. For some stations in these areas it was the driest December on record. This was the case for Hokitika and New Plymouth.

On the other hand, in Gisborne and Hawke's Bay rainfall was two to five times the normal value, and a few stations in these districts had their wettest December on record.

Temperatures: Temperatures were 1-3 degrees below average, except in Taranaki and Nelson and on the West Coast, where they were close to normal.

Highest departures from normal were recorded in eastern districts from eastern Northland to central Canterbury.

Sunshine: Sunshine was below average in the North Island and in northern and eastern districts of the South Island from Christ-church northward. Greatest deficiencies of over 50 hours were recorded in Gisborne and Hawke's Bay.

By contrast, the West Coast was favoured with 30-90 hours above average sunshine, and the Hokitika total of 284 hours was the highest in the country. Sunshine was also above normal by 15-30 hours in South Canterbury, Otago, and Southland, except near Dunedin.

Weather Sequence: The first thirteen days were marked by persistent southerly to easterly winds, with cloudy, unsettled, and unusually cool conditions in eastern districts but mainly fine sunny weather on the West Coast. A trough of low pressure which crossed the country on the 1st was accompanied by general rain, and a depression soon formed east of the South Island. The depression moved north-eastward during the next two days, and an anti-cyclone developed to the south of the country. Rain became heavier in Hawke's Bay, but the weather cleared in Westland and later in Taranaki. Thunderstorms were reported in many areas, with heavy hail in southern Hawke's Bay; and snow fell on the ranges of both islands. Pressures remained high to the south, and as the first depression moved away to the east a second depression moved into the North Tasman Sea and crossed Northland on the 5th and 6th, with heavy rain. This depression moved away slowly, but pressures remained low over Northland for another week, so that a trough extended from there to the east and later south-east, with a continuation of similar weather, particularly from Christchurch northward. However, as the system commenced to lose intensity and move away on the 12th and 13th the weather cleared from the south and west. By the 13th it had cleared in Northland and most of Hawke's Bay, but showers persisted in Gisborne.

On the 14th the weather was generally fair or fine, under the influence of an anticyclone centred over the Tasman Sea. The anticyclone moved on to the North Island, where fine weather persisted for another two days, during which time however a slow-moving trough of low pressure brought considerable rain to the West Coast and the Alps, with lighter falls in Southland and Otago. From the 17th to the 19th the trough, now weak, continued to move northward, bringing some light rain to the Kaikoura coast and southern and eastern districts of the North Island.

From the 20th to the 27th the weather was mainly fine, under the influence of a belt of high pressure covering the Tasman Sea and extending far to the east. However, the passage of a depression to the north caused rain in Northland for the first four days. Depressions passing to the south affected the western and southern coasts of the South Island from the 22nd to the 24th and again on the 25th; and on the 23rd coastal districts from Dunedin to Timaru also received some rain.

A trough of low pressure which crossed the country on the 28th and 29th brought rain mainly to eastern districts and about Cook Strait. A depression developed off East Cape, and the 30th was a cool day, with southerlies, and showers from Kaikoura to East Cape. This depression soon moved away, and on the last day of the year the weather was mainly fine, though still cool.
