CLIMATOLOGICAL TABLE—Summary of the Records of Temperature, Rainfall, and Sunshine for January 1961—continued

Table with columns: Station, Height of Station Above M.S.L., Air Temperatures in Degrees (Fahrenheit) (Means of, Mean of A and B, Difference From Normal, Absolute Maximum and Minimum), Rainfall in Inches (Total Fall, No. of Rain Days, Difference From Normal, Maximum Fall), Bright Sunshine. Rows list various stations like Woodbourne, Blenheim, Lake Grassmere, etc.

NOTE—At stations where departures from normal have an asterisk, the temperature record has been maintained for less than 10 years, the rainfall record for less than 20 years. Rainfall normals have been extensively revised and refer to the standard period 1921–50. Where observations are not available for the whole period, or where the site of the rain gauge has been changed, the normals are partly interpolated.

NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR JANUARY 1961

General: January was the third successive month of unusually cloudy, wet weather in Gisborne and Hawke's Bay, owing to the comparatively high frequency of winds from an easterly quarter. In these districts many crops were seriously affected by the wet weather, and in some areas sheep were lost in flooding on the 16th and 17th.

In many areas elsewhere there was very little rain from the middle of December to the middle of January, and in parts of the Taranaki and Nelson Provinces and on the West Coast conditions became unusually dry. However, heavy rain in the third week of January caused a marked recovery, with good pasture growth.

Rainfall: Rainfall was about double the average in Coromandel, Gisborne, and Hawke's Bay, around Taihape, and also in parts of Marlborough. Over the remainder of the North Island and in most eastern districts of the South Island it was mainly close to or somewhat above normal.

In and west of the Alps, and in western Southland, rainfall was only a third to a half of the average.

Many thunderstorms were reported in the North Island from the 18th to the 23rd, with some severe local flooding causing disruption of road and rail services at times. During a violent thunderstorm at Palmerston North on the 20th 2.09 in. of rain fell in half an hour. On the previous day during a thunderstorm at Tara Hills, Otago (North Otago), 2.66 in. were recorded in an hour.

Temperatures: Temperatures were more than 2 degrees above average in Taranaki and Nelson and on the West Coast, but more than a degree below average in eastern districts from Gisborne to Canterbury. Intermediate areas between west and east were mainly somewhat above normal.

Sunshine: Except in and west of the Alps, in parts of Central Otago, and in Wellington, sunshine was below normal. In Gisborne and Hawke's Bay, with deficiencies of 70 to 100 hours, it was one of the cloudiest Januaries on record. Elsewhere the deficiency was mainly 40 to 60 hours.

In Gisborne and Hawke's Bay the last season with similar persistent cloud and rain during November, December, and January was 1952–53.

Weather Sequence: The first fortnight was a period of predominantly settled weather, with very little rain over the greater part of the country. From the 1st to the 5th an anticyclone, initially over the North Island and later centred to the east, caused mainly fair weather. However, depressions passing close to Southland brought wet weather at times to western and far southern districts of the South Island. During the next three days the presence of a depression near Raoul Island caused some rain in Bay of Plenty, Northland, and Gisborne; but the 9th was generally fine under the influence of a large anticyclone covering the Tasman Sea and New Zealand. A weak trough which crossed the country during the next three days brought more rain at first in the far south-west; later some light falls extended to a few other districts, especially Westland and parts of the North Island high country. During the 13th and 14th the anticyclone was centred to the east of the country, and the approach of a tropical cyclone from the vicinity of Norfolk Island caused light rain in eastern Northland.

By contrast, the 15th to the 22nd was a period of unsettled and at times stormy weather, with some very heavy rain. There was a general deterioration as the tropical cyclone moved on to Northland and a trough crossed the South Island. The 16th was a particularly wet and stormy day in Coromandel, Gisborne, and Hawke's Bay. During the 17th and 18th the depression lost intensity and moved south-westward, while another depression developed to the north-west of Northland. These two days were not as wet as the previous two, and there was little rain north of Tauranga or south of Timaru. From the 19th to the 22nd the depression remained almost stationary to the west of the Auckland Peninsula and a warm, moist, northerly airstream covered the North Island. There were many thunderstorms in the North Island, causing some flooding and disruption of road and rail transport. At the same time a cold front brought rain at times to the South Island, especially on the 20th.

Conditions improved during the 23rd and 24th as the depression moved away to the east, but showers were reported at first in east coast districts north of Timaru. For the next four days an anticyclone over the Tasman Sea extended on to New Zealand and the weather was fair or fine, apart from some showers in the Bay of Plenty on the 27th. On the 29th and 30th the development of a small depression off the Canterbury coast caused rain except in some western districts of the Auckland Province. On the last day of the month a large anticyclone covered the country and the weather was fine apart from a few showers on the West Coast and in Taranaki and Northland.
