NOTE—At stations where departures from normal have an asterisk, the temperature record has been maintained for less than 10 years, the rainfall record for less than 20 years. Rainfall normals have been revised and now refer to the standard period 1921–50. Where observation are not available for the whole period, or where the site of the rain gauge has been changed, the normals are partly interpolated.

NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR APRIL 1961

General: April was a sunny month with some spells of settled weather, especially from the 19th to the 24th. It was a good month for harvesting and in most areas farmers were well pleased with pasture growth and the state of their stock. However, in Marlborough the weather was too dry.

Strong north-westerly gales caused damage in many districts on the 1st.

Rainfall: Over most of the country rainfall was close to or somewhat below average. It was less than half the normal value in most of Marlborough and Nelson, and in parts of North Canterbury and Gisborne. In central Marlborough some stations received less than half an inch.

The only area with rainfall appreciably above average was Southland.

A number of stations in the South Island reported thunderstorms on the 17th.

Temperatures: Temperatures were close to normal in the North Island, but they were a degree warmer than average over most of the South Island.

In Canterbury the 14th and 16th were particularly warm days. On the 16th the maximum temperatures at Christchurch (86·2°F) and Ashburton (87·2°F) were the highest ever recorded for April.

A fall of snow was reported on the 1st over parts of the South Island high country.

Sunshine: Sunshine was above average or close to it, except in Northland, Southland, and parts of the West Coast. Canterbury and Marlborough were favoured with highest departures of 30-60 hours.

In Northland and Southland sunshine was mainly about 20 hours below average.

Weather Sequence: On the 1st and 2nd a very deep depression was passing to the south, causing a strong north-westerly airstream over New Zealand, with gales in many districts. Rain affected most areas apart from Canterbury.

From the 3rd to the 13th was a period of unsettled, showery weather in Northland owing to the predominance of easterlies; and for most of the time showers were also reported in Gisborne. Elsewhere the weather cleared and remained fair from the 3rd to the 7th as an anticyclone moved from the Tasman Sea across the South Island. The weather deteriorated in the south from the 8th to the 10th with the passage of a trough. On the next two days the trough affected western districts of the North Island, and some rain persisted on the West Coast and at first in Otago. On the 13th an anticyclone was centred east of the North Island and the weather was mainly fair.

During the next two days the anticyclone remained centred to the east, but with the approach of a very deep depression across the south Tasman Sea a warm north-westerly airstream covered the country. Rain developed on the West Coast and in western Southland and soon spread to northern districts of both islands. From the 16th to the 18th the main centre of the depression passed close to Southland and moved away to the south-east, but a small secondary centre developed near Westland and moved north-eastward together with an associated trough. Rain became general and many thunderstorms were reported. By the 18th the weather was clearing from the south and west.

The 19th to the 24th was a period of mainly settled weather as an anticyclone moved from the Tasman Sea across New Zealand to the east. However, there was some light rain at first in Northland; and showers were reported at times in Fiordland and on the Southland coast.

During the 25th and 26th a trough of low pressure moved over the South Island accompanied by a period of rain. At the same time a depression from the north Tasman Sea was moving south-eastward, and on the 27th this crossed the Auckland Province, with considerable rain over the North Island. The weather commenced to clear in the south, but on the following day, with the depression moving away, light rain persisted over most of the North Island.

During the last two days of the month the weather was mainly fair under the influence of a large anticyclone.
