NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR DECEMBER 1964

General: December was a warm month. In the North Island the warm temperatures with adequate rainfall produced unusually good pasture growth, which was especially appreciated by the dairy farmers. However, the persistent unsettled weather over the North Island in the middle of the month held up haymaking and shearing. In Canterbury and neighbouring areas of Otago and Marlborough rainfall was inadequate and conditions were much too dry.

During the last week, from Christmas Day to the end of the month, most of the country was favoured with good holiday weather—settled, sunny, and warm.

A small local tornado caused some damage at Matangi, near Cambridge, on the 18th.

Rainfall: Rainfall was mainly above average in the North Island and below average in the South Island. The greatest surplus was recorded in the central high country of the North Island, with more than double the average value. The greatest deficiency was recorded in North Canterbury and Banks Peninsula, with less than half the average value.

The month was notable for excessive thunderstorm activity, with some heavy short-period downpours. An exceptional downpour occurred at Rolleston, near Christchurch, in the early morning of the 21st, when 5 inches of rain was reported to have fallen in less than three hours.

Temperatures: Temperatures were above average—by 2–3 degrees in the South Island and by 1–2 degrees in the North Island. The warmest spells were from the 11th to the 17th and the last week.

Sunshine: Sunshine was 20–50 hours below average in Central Otago and the Southern Lakes district; and 10–30 hours below average in Nelson, Manawatu and Wanganui. Northland, Auckland and Waikato together with the Canterbury plains and coast and coastal Otago were favoured with 20–50 hours above average.

Weather Sequence: During the first three days an anticyclone was centred to the north and pressures were low to the south. A trough of low pressure passed slowly north-eastward over the country, and a small secondary depression formed on it. Rain commenced in the west and south of the South Island and spread over nearly the whole of this island; it also extended to the Wellington and Taranaki Provinces and Waitomo. A weaker trough on the 4th affected mainly the West Coast and Southland. On the following day the weather was fair, under the influence of an anticyclone centred east of Auckland.

From the 6th to the 8th another trough of low pressure associated with a depression to the south crossed the country, while a small depression on it moved over the North Island. General rain was reported, heavy on the West Coast on the 6th and 7th and in the Manawatu-Wanganui-Taranaki area on the 7th. Fair weather prevailed again on the 9th and 10th, with an anticyclone centred at first over the country and later to the east.

During the period from the 11th to the 17th an anticyclone was centred far to the east, and a series of depressions covered the Tasman Sea. Warm moist northerly air brought unsettled conditions with rain especially in northern and western districts. Some thunderstorms were reported, with several intense downpours flooding city streets, as in Wanganui on the 15th, Invercargill on the 16th, and Napier on the 17th. There was very little rain in Canterbury and Otago during this period.

The weather remained very unsettled but a little cooler over the period from the 18th to the 21st as a trough of low pressure crossed New Zealand and a small depression formed over the South Island and drifted north-eastward. Thunderstorms were still reported, especially in the Waikato-Rotorua area; and on the 21st one near Lincoln in Canterbury was accompanied by an exceptional downpour. However, parts of Canterbury and Otago received very little rain.

The weather had cleared in many districts by the 22nd. From this date to the 24th a tropical storm passed to the east of the country, and a weak southerly change brought unseasonably cool temperatures, with snow on Mount Egmont. Some rain was reported, mainly in southern and eastern districts.

During the last week, from Christmas Day to the end of the month, most of the country was favoured with good holiday weather—settled, sunny, and warm. An anticyclone was centred at first over New Zealand and later to the east. However, at times weak troughs brought some rain to Southland, Westland, and Otago; and from the 28th onwards the moist northerly airstream brought considerable rain to the North Island high country, with lighter falls in Bay of Plenty. Thunderstorms affected some areas on the last three days, including Palmerston North, where a downpour was reported.
