Electrical Wiring Regulations 1961—Electrical Apparatus Which May Constitute an Electrical Hazard

PURSUANT to regulation 8 of the Electrical Wiring Regulations 1961, notice is hereby given that:

1. The apparatus described below may, in my opinion, constitute an electrical hazard.

Description: Three-pin flat-pin type 10 amp. plugs constructed from moulded thermoplastic material in two parts, the two parts being held together without the use of screws or the like.

2. The possible electrical hazard arises from the similarity in construction of these plugs with the prohibited two-piece rubber plugs that have been the cause of fatal electrical accidents in New Zealand. The cover portion over the terminals of these thermoplastic plugs is intended to be secured to the body portion by being a tight fit when pressed into position, but with age or when damaged the cover is considered likely to become sufficiently loose that it could slip off accidentally and thus expose live terminals.

3. The plugs also fail to comply with the following requirements of New Zealand Standard Specification 198: 1958 3-pin flat-pin plugs, plug-sockets, tap-ons, and cord extension sockets with 10 amp, 250 volt (maximum) rating:

Clause 4—Materials and construction.

Clause 11—Identification of contacts and pins.

Compliance with N.Z.S.S. 198 is a statutory requirement for such plugs.

4. These plugs are likely to be found connected to the flexible cord of portable appliances manufactured in Australia.

5. All persons who have purchased appliances fitted with the above-mentioned plugs should arrange for the plugs to be replaced with ones of a safe type immediately and destroy the unsafe ones.

6. Every person who sells or offers for sale any apparatus which in the opinion of the General Manager of the New Zealand Electricity Department constitutes or may constitute an electrical hazard commits an offence and shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £20.

Dated at Wellington this 4th day of March 1965.

E. B. MACKENZIE,

General Manager, New Zealand Electricity Department.
