The "normal" refers to the present site of the instruments. The standard periods for normals are: for temperature 1931-60, for rainfall 1921-50, and for sunshine 1935-60. No normals are available for stations with only short records.

NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR APRIL 1965

General: April was comparatively sunny over most of the country and also drier than usual in many districts. The weather was particularly settled from the 13th to the 22nd.

Generally, it was a very good month for farming, with excellent growth for the time of the year. However, in parts of Nelson and Marlborough the weather was too dry; and in parts of Southland at the end of the month conditions were too cold and too wet.

South-westerly gales caused some damage on the 26th, especially in Southland, Taranaki, Hawke's Bay, Waikato, and Auckland.

Rainfall: Over nearly the whole of the North Island and in western, northern, and most inland districts of the South Island rainfall was below average, mainly by about 25 per cent. In northern Northland, coastal Bay of Plenty, and Manawatu the deficiency was more than 50 per cent. In eastern districts of the South Island, including eastern Southland, rainfall was mainly above average by about 50 per cent. It was a particularly wet month for parts of North Canterbury, with more than double the normal rainfall.

Temperatures: Mean temperatures were mainly close to average. However, in Southland and parts of Otago and also in eastern Northland they were 1-2 degrees below average.

Snow was reported on the high country of the South Island about the 7th; and there were fairly frequent falls on the high country of both Islands during the last week of the month.

Sunshine: Most of the country was favoured with more sunshine than usual. The surplus was about 40 hours in Taupo, Gisborne, and coastal Bay of Plenty; but in Northland it amounted to 50-75 hours. On the other hand, Southland and coastal Otago received 30-70 hours less sunshine than normal.

Weather Sequence: On the 1st a weak trough of low pressure brought some rain to the Cook Strait area. During the next two days a small depression passed to the south-west of the South Island, and its associated trough of low pressure brought rain to the Alps, the West Coast, and the Southland coast. Pressures soon rose, with mainly settled weather on the 4th and 5th, but some rain was reported in the Rotorua-Taupo area.

From the 6th to the 8th a cold front moved north-eastwards over New Zealand as far as Hamilton, accompanied by a period of rain, with snow on the South Island high country. With a depression to the north-east and anticyclones over the Tasman Sea and to the east of the South Island, the front now became stationary for two days, with rain in many parts of the North Island and in the northern half of the South Island. Winds were mainly easterlies. As the depression moved southward and deepened, winds became south-easterly on the 11th and 12th and rain was restricted mainly to eastern districts of both Islands, heavy in the North Canterbury-Kaikoura area.

The 13th to the 22nd was a period of settled weather over the greater part of the country. For the first four of these days an anticyclone initially over the South Island moved slowly north-eastward. Pressures remained high over most of the country from the 17th to the 19th but a trough of low pressure brought some rain to the West Coast and the Southland coast. For the next two days an anticyclone covered the whole country. However, a depression over the south Tasman Sea was approaching New Zealand by the 22nd, with rain once again on the West Coast.

During the next two days the depression crossed the South Island, while the associated trough of low pressure moved over the whole country. Rain was fairly general, with some considerable falls in Westland and inland Canterbury and in the Auckland Province. Snow was reported on the high country. As the depression moved to the east and deepened, winds turned to the south during the 25th and 26th with further general rain and some very strong winds in Southland and the Auckland Province. For the last four days of the month this deep depression was centred far to the south-east, and cold south-westerlies covered the country, with rain mainly in western districts and on the Southland and Otago coasts. Further snow was reported on the high country of both Islands.

The Indecent Publications Act 1963

IN the matter of the Indecent Publications Act 1963 and in the matter of an application by Pauls Book Arcade (Auckland) Ltd., in respect of John Cleland's Fanny Hill in a paperback edition.

DECISION OF THE TRIBUNAL

THE tribunal has considered an application made by Pauls Book Arcade (Auckland) Ltd.—with the consent of the Minister of Justice—for a decision in respect of a paperback edition of Fanny Hill, whether it is indecent or not or for a decision as to its classification.

The book Fanny Hill, or to give it its full title Fanny Hill, or The Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure, was written by John Cleland and first published in 1749. The book submitted to the tribunal is an expurgated paperback edition published by Mayflower Books Ltd. of London. It is stated on a fore leaf that only in the United States of America can the full unexpurgated edition be sold. There have been prosecutions in England regarding the book but we are not aware whether the edition submitted to us has been the subject of judicial consideration. It is this last we are called upon to consider.

It is the story of a young country girl in eighteenth century England, who goes to London and there adopts the profession of a prostitute not so much of her own inclination as because circumstances led her to such a life. She was in her ignorance innocently introduced into a house of ill fame where she was corrupted but subsequently escaped under the protection of a young gentleman she had met there, with whom she lived for a while, but from whom by an unfortunate chance she became parted. Thereafter at the instigation of and with the encouragement of others, she embarked on a career of prostitution until ultimately by chance she and her first lover became reunited. The book abounds in sexual incidents frankly narrating her progress in prostitution but avoids any gross and crude expressions.

No submissions were made on behalf of the applicant, but counsel for the Secretary for Justice argued that the book should be held to be indecent. We do not accept his contention that the conduct depicted was treated in an "uncondemnatory" fashion, nor his contention that any literary value the book had was destroyed by the excisions which had been made to produce an expurgated edition though no doubt its literary value was thereby lessened. Nevertheless the book has some value as a "period piece" portraying eighteenth century life and manners. In so far as it describes the progress in prostitution of a young woman that is a theme by no means uncommon in present day novels in which sexual episodes are described with the utmost frankness and a wealth of detail.

There is, and no doubt always will be, a school of thought which would ban all accounts of sexual behaviour and another more liberal school which demands freedom from censorship except where it can be held that the circulation of a particular book is injurious in the public interest. We are not prepared to hold that the expurgated edition submitted to us is injurious to the public good. In our opinion it is unlikely that any adult reader would be corrupted or become depraved by reading it.

We are however faced with a more difficult question— as we have been before—whether the book should be held to be indecent in the hands of persons under 18 years of age. The question whether such a restriction should be imposed must be determined in relation to the particular book submitted. Decisions in respect of other books we have had to consider cannot be regarded as precedents governing this issue, especially as this book is being for the first time introduced into New Zealand. When the tribunal decided to impose no restriction on the sale of Another Country, it was influenced to some extent by such considerations as the high price of the hard cover edition which was submitted to it and to the improbability of juveniles reading it having regard to the difficulty minors would have in appreciating the theme and purpose of the author. So too in regard to Lady Chatterley's Lover, though the tribunal was unanimous in regarding the book as "unsuitable" reading for young persons, the majority of the tribunal was strongly influenced by the consideration that in the circumstances present, namely that a hard back edition was in full circulation, a decision to impose a restriction as to age would be ineffectual and might in fact promote or heighten a curiosity in juveniles to read the book. Moreover other and more fundamental considerations might have confirmed the majority in their attitude.

As regards the particular book we have to pronounce upon, we desire to emphasise that our decision relates to this edition alone. We have decided to restrict circulation or sale to persons of 18 years of age or over. Though well written it is no more than an account of a succession of bedroom reminiscences and sexual incidents. It would be easy reading for juveniles whose only interest could be precocious.

The book has no substance other than to relate the experiences of a prostitute and we think that it might arouse interest in the one form of perversion it describes. It should, as far as practicable, be withheld from impressionable young persons. It is not in the public interest that the access of juveniles to the book should be facilitated. We accordingly make a ruling which the Statute permits classifying it as indecent in the hands of persons under 18 years of age, though we feel considerable doubt as to how far, if at all, such a classification will have the effect sought. But for what it is worth we classify the book submitted as indecent in the hands of persons under 18 years of age.

K. M. GRESSON, Chairman.
