NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR DECEMBER 1967

General—December was a wet month in many districts and also comparatively warm. In the North Island pasture growth was particularly good, but the weather was rather too unsettled for haymaking and shearing.

Rainfall—Rainfall was above average over almost all of the North Island and also west of a line from Hokitika to Balclutha. The surplus was mainly 50 percent; but in parts of central and southern Hawke's Bay, in some central districts of the North Island, and in the southern lakes district rainfall was more than double the average value.

In eastern and northern districts of the South Island rainfall was mainly below average by 25 percent. In central Marlborough and on the Canterbury plains and coast from Christchurch to Timaru it was less than half the average value.

Thunderstorms were unusually frequent over the North Island. Many stations heard thunder on the 28th, with heavy downpours, especially in the Taihape district and in Hawke's Bay and Wairarapa, causing serious disruption of road transport in some places.

Temperatures—In the North Island mean temperatures were mainly 1-3 degrees above average, highest departures being in Waitomo and North Taranaki. In the South Island they were mainly close to average.

Sunshine—Sunshine was below average by 30 to 60 hours in an area extending from Waitomo and Bay of Plenty through central districts of the North Island to Hawke's Bay and Wairarapa, and also on the Kaikoura coast. On the other hand most of Westland, South Canterbury, and Otago were favoured with 20-40 hours above average.

Weather Sequence—At the beginning of the month a depression to the east of the North Island was moving away and an anticyclone covered the Tasman Sea. At first rain affected the greater part of the North Island, but on the 2nd the weather cleared, except in Bay of Plenty. During the next two days a very deep depression passed far to the south and the associated trough of low pressure crossed the South Island.

The trough of low pressure became almost stationary just north of Cook Strait, and a depression formed on it during the 5th and 6th. Rain spread over almost the whole of the North Island, but the weather cleared in the south. As this depression departed slowly to the southeast, another trough of low pressure moved over the South Island. There was further rain over the North Island, clearing on the 8th, except in the west. In the South Island western and southern districts and some northern districts reported rain. Snow fell to low levels in Fiordland. A cold front brought a change to south-westerlies on the 9th, with a clearance in many North Island districts but with further rain in parts of the South Island, now including mid-Canterbury. Fair weather prevailed generally during the 10th and most of the 11th with the passage of an anticyclone from mid-Tasman across the North Island.

By the evening of the 11th another trough of low pressure associated with a depression to the south was approaching Southland, and very heavy rain set in on parts of the West Coast. The trough soon became slow-moving with the formation of a wave depression over Otago. The heavy rain spread to the whole of the West Coast and the Alps and western Southland and persisted during the 12th and 13th. Some rain also affected the remainder of the South Island apart from the Canterbury plains and coast, the Kaikoura coast and central Marlborough. During the next two days the trough moved on over the North Island, where another depression developed, with general rain there, heavy in places; while the weather cleared in the south. However, on the 16th Fiordland and South Westland were affected by another trough of low pressure. The depression now lay to the east of the North Island, and some rain was still reported from Auckland through Waikato and Bay of Plenty to Gisborne and Hawke's Bay.

A welcome spell of settled weather was associated with the passage of an anticyclone over New Zealand and to the south-east past the Chatham Islands from the 17th to the 20th. A shallow depression developed over the Tasman Sea during this period and became almost stationary west of Cook Strait. From the 21st to the 23rd the depression moved away to the northwest while a trough of low pressure originally associated with it moved south-eastward across the country. This trough was accompanied by scattered patches of rain, mainly light.

Issued by: The Director, New Zealand Meteorological Service, P.O. Box 722, Wellington, 5 January 1968.

On the 24th the depression over the north-west Tasman moved towards New Zealand once again, while the trough was stationary over the country. Rain now became fairly general. On Christmas Day and Boxing Day the weather was mainly settled, under the influence of a weak ridge of high pressure. However, some rain was reported in Taranaki and Gisborne. The shallow depression over the North Tasman Sea finally moved slowly across the North Island from the 27th to the 29th. Rain was fairly general over the North Island and at first it also extended as far south as Timaru and Haast. This was a particularly thundery period, and some heavy downpours were reported, especially in some southern and eastern districts of the North Island on the 28th. The depression moved away eastward on the 30th, and the weather cleared in most districts.

On the last day of the year a depression was passing close to Southland. As the associated trough of low pressure approached the South Island, rain was reported on the West Coast and in the Alps, the southern lakes district, the Canterbury high country, and Nelson; with scattered falls also in the North Island high country.
