NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR SEPTEMBER 1970

General—September was marked by an unusually high frequency of north-westerly winds. It was the wettest September over the country as a whole since 1943 and also stormy and very cloudy. Pasture growth was good early in the month but in many districts, especially in the west, conditions were too wet by the end of the month. A particularly cold southerly change on the 24th brought snow to many inland districts of the South Island, causing considerable losses of lambs. Severe frosts which followed in the south on the 25th and 26th proved disastrous to the Central Otago fruit crop.

Unusually strong north-westerly gales buffeted Central Otago and the Canterbury high country on the 10th, reaching an average wind speed over 10 minutes at Mount John Observatory (Lake Tekapo) of 134 miles per hour. Strong north-westerly gales also buffeted Wellington and Hawke's Bay on the 24th.

Small local tornadoes were reported in Mangere (Auckland) on the 11th and in New Plymouth on the 17th.

Rainfall—Rainfall was above normal over nearly the whole country. It was more than double the normal value over the greater part of the South Island, in an area extending eastward from Nelson and the West Coast, including the Marlborough Sounds, the high country, and Central Otago. In parts of the Southern Lakes district it was more than four times the normal value. In the North Island it was more than double the normal from Waitomo and Taranaki to eastern Bay of Plenty, and also in Manawatu.

Flooding was reported on the West Coast, in Nelson, and in North Otago, after considerable rain from the 14th to the 17th. The 29th and 30th brought falls of 3-4 in. in Bay of Plenty, Taupo, and Waikato, causing flooding around Whakatane and later in the Waipa and lower Waikato rivers.

Temperatures—Temperatures were warmer than normal by 1-3 degrees over the North Island and in most of Marlborough and Canterbury. They were cooler than normal by 1-2 degrees in Otago, Southland, and Fiordland.

At Mid Dome, in western Southland, the thermometer dropped to 11° F on the 25th, the lowest temperature ever recorded in New Zealand in September below an altitude of about 3,000 ft. On the following day the minimum temperature there was still only 13° F.

Sunshine—Sunshine was below normal over the whole country, mainly by 30-60 hours. Waihi had its cloudiest September in 43 years of observation, with only 84 hours of sunshine.

Weather Sequence—At the beginning of September the slow-moving trough which had caused excessive rain in Nelson and in the Alps and on the West Coast at the end of August, was still active but weakening, and moving northward over the North Island. On the 1st rain affected the southern half of the North Island and also the greater part of the South Island but on the two following days it affected mainly northern and eastern districts of the North Island and was only light. On the 4th the weather was fine, under the influence of an anticyclone centred to the east.

From the 5th to the 17th there was a marked predominance of northerly to westerly winds. During the 5th and 6th a deep depression to the south of Tasmania moved eastward while two associated troughs crossed New Zealand. In the westerlies rain affected western districts of both Islands, besides Southland, parts of Central Otago, and the Canterbury high country. Further troughs crossed the country during the next 2 days as the depression passed far to the south of New Zealand with rain still affecting mainly the West Coast, but on the 8th also eastern districts as far as North Canterbury with a wind change to southerlies. During the 9th and 10th a depression from the mid-Tasman Sea moved south-eastward over Southland while a second centre formed to the north-west and the trough associated with the two depressions moved on to the country. Winds were predominantly strong northerlies with some violent gales in Central Otago and the Canterbury high country. Besides rain persisting on the West Coast, it also spread to Nelson, parts of Southland, Bay of Plenty, and Taupo. On the 11th there was a change to westerly to south-westerly winds and general rain except in Hawke's Bay. Some considerable falls were reported in Nelson, Marlborough, Wellington, and Taumarunui. During the next 2 days a ridge of high pressure extended on to the country from an anticyclone passing to the north. Showers at first extended to western districts of both Islands and Southland but by the 13th they had cleared over the North Island.

During the 14th to the 17th pressures remained high to the east and low to the south, and two active troughs in succession crossed the country. These were 4 rather wet days, especially in western and northern districts, while in the east the rain was lighter. Floods were reported on the West Coast, in Nelson, and in North Otago; while gales buffeted northern districts on the 17th.

On the 18th a small anticyclone was centred near Northland and pressures were still low far to the south. On this and the following day two further troughs of low pressure crossed New Zealand with rain in western districts of both Islands, but also extending well towards the east on the second day. As the second depression was moving off the North Island a depression formed on it near East Cape on the 20th, resulting in southerly winds with rain in eastern districts from Marlborough northward, including also eastern Bay of Plenty and Northland; while the rain cleared on the West Coast. A ridge of high pressure from an anticyclone to the north brought fair weather on the 2 following days.

By the 23rd the anticyclone was centred to the north-west of the North Island and a deep depression covered most of the Tasman Sea, while another deeper depression was centred to the south-east of Campbell Island. Rain covered the South Island except for the Kaikoura Coast and most of Canterbury, while Wellington, Manawatu, and parts of Taranaki were also affected. On the 24th the depression from the Tasman Sea moved on to the northern part of the South Island with its associated trough, while at the same time a cold front behind it brought unusually cold southerlies. Strong north-west gales were reported in Wellington and Hawke's Bay. Rain covered most of the country; but snow was reported in many inland South Island districts. As the whole system moved on to the North Island during the following day rain became heavier there, while the weather cleared in the south causing unusually severe frosts, disastrous for the Central Otago fruit crop. From the 26th to the 28th the depression moved away to the east and south-westerlies covered the country. Fairly general rain persisted at first, especially in the North Island, but later the weather cleared in many districts, though still remaining showery in some areas, notably Southland, Westland and Buller, North Taranaki, Waikato, and Northland.

On the 29th a depression covered the Tasman Sea with a warm front extending from it over the North Island, causing rain as far south as Ohakea and Waipukurau, but affecting also parts of Canterbury. By the last day of the month a small centre had moved to the east of the North Island while the main centre was still almost stationary over the Central Tasman Sea. Rain spread as far south as Dunedin and Westport with falls of 2-3 in. in Bay of Plenty, Waikato, and Taupo. This rain caused some flooding near Whakatane and was also responsible for flooding of the Waikato and Waipa Rivers early in October.
