NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR JANUARY 1971

General—Barometric pressures were high to the south of New Zealand in January, and easterly to north-easterly winds were unusually frequent, bringing excessive cloud to eastern districts, with very warm conditions in western districts. From the 3rd to the 8th, cyclone Rosie brought several inches of rain to the greater part of the country and this relieved the prevailing very dry conditions. For the remainder of the month there were only light falls of rain, and conditions became dry again. They were worst in areas least affected by cyclone Rosie, especially parts of Northland, Southland, and Otago.

Rainfall—Rainfall was above normal over the greater part of the North Island and in Marlborough with most of Nelson and North Canterbury. It was more than double the normal value in parts of Manawatu, Wairarapa, and Marlborough.

Rainfall was less than half the normal value over the Canterbury high country and the Alps, South Westland, and parts of Fiordland and Central Otago. The total of 2.35 in. at the Hermitage was the lowest January rainfall there in 50 years of observations.

An exceptional downpour of 7 in. in 7 hours at Tariki, north of Stratford, on the 5th resulted in local flooding.

Temperatures—Temperatures were 5-6°F. (3°C.) above normal in western districts but only about normal in eastern districts. Western districts were in fact warmer than eastern districts in the same latitude, which is quite unusual in summer.

Sunshine—Sunshine was below normal except in northern districts of the North Island and in Southland and Otago, where it was close to normal. Greatest departures of 60-90 hours were recorded in eastern districts of both Islands and also in Taupo. The totals of 159 hours at Napier, 165 hours at Blenheim, and 138 hours at Hanmer were the lowest in January for at least 45 years.

Weather Sequence—On the first 2 days of January an extensive anticyclone was centred first to the south of New Zealand and later to the east. Pressures were low over the Tasman Sea and cyclone Rosie was moving southward from Noumea. The weather was mainly settled but rain was reported in the Bay of Plenty and Hawke's Bay, on the Kaikoura coast, and in parts of Canterbury and Otago.

The period from the 3rd to the 8th was the main one of unsettled weather during the month, with considerable rain from cyclone Rosie over the North Island and the northern half of the South Island. At first the cyclone reached a position just west of Auckland. Afterwards it slowly lost intensity and winds turned to south-easterlies. A shallow depression still persisted on the 6th and later moved over the North Island.

On the 9th pressures were relatively high over the North Island but the weather was affected by a trough to the north-east, and rain was still reported in Bay of Plenty and Taupo. During the 2 following days a trough of low pressure crossed the country accompanied by varying amounts of rain, except in northern districts of the North Island. Temperatures became cooler in the southerlies.

From the 12th to the 15th an anticyclone was centred to the south-east of the South Island, while pressures were low to the north of the country. The weather was mainly fine, but easterlies over the North Island brought light rain to Gisborne and Hawke's Bay, and at times also to Northland, Auckland, Waikato, Bay of Plenty, and Wairarapa. For the next 3 days an anticyclone was centred to the east of the South Island, while a trough of low pressure advanced slowly eastward across the South Tasman Sea. The weather was settled over most of the country, but freshening northerlies brought some rain to Fiordland and South Westland.

From the 19th to the 23rd the trough of low pressure moved slowly northward over the country accompanied by scattered rain, which was mainly light, except on the West Coast and parts of Taupo and Bay of Plenty. During the next 2 days an anticyclone was centred east of the South Island and the weather was generally fine.

From the 26th to the 28th a trough of low pressure was stationary over Southland bringing rain there, and also light falls on both coasts of the South Island further north. This trough of low pressure finally crossed the rest of the country during the last 3 days of the month, accompanied by scattered rain, mainly light.
