The "normal" refers to the present site of the instruments. The standard periods for normals are: for temperature 1931-60, for rainfall 1921-50, and for sunshine 1935-60. No normals are available for stations with only short records.

*The sunshine recorder is not located at the station but is in the near vicinity.

NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR FEBRUARY 1971

General—February was exceptionally warm, especially in the west and south. As in January, there was an unusually high frequency of north-easterly winds. It also resembled the previous month in that many districts had nearly all their rain in a few days, from the 23rd to the 25th. Between the rains from cyclone Rosie early in January and this period in February there were 6 weeks of dry hot weather, affecting especially the South Island and southern districts of the North Island. Parts of the Southland Plain and western Southland were still very dry by the end of the month, with some sheep being sold off and young trees also affected. Forest fires were exceptionally frequent in Westland, Otago, and Southland and they also affected some North Island areas, especially around Wellington.

Rainfall—Rainfall showed unusually wide variations from record low values for February of less than 10 percent of the normal on parts of the Southland Plain to record high values of more than four times normal around New Plymouth and Kaitaia. It was below normal, mainly by 50 percent, over most of the South Island besides Wellington, Wairarapa, Southern Hawke's Bay, and Taihape.

Northern Northland, western Taranaki, and Taupo received more than double the normal rainfall. A slow-moving trough brought most of the month's rain to Kaitaia from the 20th to the 25th and to New Plymouth in a little over 24 hours on the 24th and 25th, with flooding in both areas. The 24-hour fall at New Plymouth Airport of 14 in. was quite exceptional, and the flooding in the city was reported to be the worst in living memory. The total rainfall for the 23rd and 24th at Stratford Mountain House was 31.3 in., one of the highest 2-day totals ever recorded in New Zealand.

Temperatures—This was equal with February 1935 as the third warmest month on record, the two warmest being February 1938, and January 1956, also about equal. Departures above normal ranged from 1°F (0.5°C.) in east coast districts from Kaikoura to Gisborne to 7°F (4°C.) over parts of the Alps and Fiordland. The average departure over the North Island was 2.5°F (1.4°C.) and over the South Island 4.5°F (2.5°C.). The maximum temperature of 101°F (38°C.) at Darfield in North Canterbury on the 10th was equal to the previous highest value for New Zealand recorded at Ashburton, on 19 January 1956.

Sunshine—Sunshine was mainly 20-70 hours below normal over the North Island, with especially low values in Bay of Plenty. The South Island was favoured with 20-60 hours above normal, except for Nelson.

Weather Sequence—For the first 3 days of the month a large anticyclone covered the country, moving slowly northward. The weather was settled except in Taupo, Bay of Plenty, and Northland, where there were frequent showers, with some thunderstorms. A trough of low pressure associated with a depression far to the south-east crossed New Zealand during the 4th and 5th. Only scattered light rain was reported, except in Bay of Plenty and Taupo, which received heavier falls with some further thunderstorms.

From the 6th to the 9th another anticyclone covered the country, also moving slowly northward, and the weather was fine apart from a few showers in Taupo, Northland, and Gisborne on the 6th. The fine weather was interrupted on the 10th by rain in Fiordland and on the Southland coast from a weak trough of low pressure. However, for the next 3 days the weather was once more generally fine, with the anticyclone centred to the east.

On the 14th a trough of low pressure associated with a depression far to the south crossed the South Island with scattered rain there as far north as Westport and Christchurch, and also in Northland and Coromandel. For the next 4 days the trough was almost stationary over the North Island. An anticyclone was centred east of the South Island and pressures were low far to the north. Easterly winds covered the North Island, with considerable rain in Gisborne, Hawke's Bay, and Taupo, and lighter falls over the rest of the island. From the 19th to the 21st the anticyclone was centred to the east of the North Island while a depression near Norfolk Island was moving southwards. Winds were now north-easterlies over the North Island, with rain mainly in Northland, Coromandel, and Bay of Plenty. Some considerable falls were recorded in northern Northland.

From the 22nd to the 26th the vigorous trough of low pressure which had been developing over the North Tasman Sea moved slowly across the North Island, while another trough of low pressure crossed the South Island from the south-west. This was a period of very unsettled weather with rain fairly general over the country, especially on the 23rd and 24th. Some particularly heavy falls were recorded in western and northern districts of the North Island. In New Plymouth the rainfall was quite exceptional and caused very serious flooding; and flooding was also reported around Kaitaia and Kaeo in Northland, and in the Waitotara Valley north-west of Wanganui.

During the last 2 days of the month a large anticyclone covered the country and the weather was fine apart from some light rain in Buller and Nelson on the 27th.
