The "normal" refers to the present site of the instruments. The standard periods for normals are: for temperature 1931-60, for rainfall 1921-50, and for sunshine 1935-60. No normals are available for stations with only short records.

*The sunshine recorder is not located at the station but is in the near vicinity.
A "rain day" is equal to or greater than 0.1 mm.

NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR APRIL 1972

General—Although April was marked by an unusually high frequency of south-westerly winds, it was a warm month. Conditions were mainly favourable for farming, especially in the North Island, where dairy production was higher than usual.

South-westerly gales were reported in many districts on the 17th, 18th, and 19th.

Rainfall—Rainfall was mainly somewhat below normal over the North Island and somewhat above normal over the South Island. The greatest deficiencies were recorded in Bay of Plenty, most of which had less than half the normal, with some eastern coastal areas below a quarter. Greatest excesses were recorded in two areas, both of which had more than 50 per cent above normal. The first was an inland area extending through parts of Nelson, Buller, and North Canterbury. The second consisted of Stewart Island and eastern Southland with parts of South Otago.

Temperatures—Temperatures were above normal, mainly by 1-1°C.

Sunshine—Sunshine was above normal by 20-40 hours in eastern and southern districts of the North Island. It was below normal by 20-40 hours in Buller and North Westland and by 20-30 hours in Otago and Southland.

Weather Sequence—During the first 5 days of April an anticyclone moved from Bass Strait across the Tasman Sea to the east of the North Island, while pressures remained low to the east and south-east of the South Island. South-westerlies predominated with settled weather in many districts. However, some showery periods were reported on the Southland and Otago coast and on the West Coast; while light showers affected western districts of the North Island.

From the 6th to the 8th pressures were low over the eastern Tasman Sea and New Zealand. A depression formed over the North Tasman Sea and moved on to the South Island. A second depression then formed west of Northland and remained almost stationary. Rain was general as far south as Canterbury and South Westland.

The second depression drifted northward on the 9th, while an anticyclone moved on to the country, progressing further eastward during the next 2 days. Easterlies brought showers at times to Northland, Gisborne, and Hawke's Bay. During the next 4 days an anticyclone passed over and to the east of Campbell Island, while pressures were low over the North Island. Easterlies became more general, bringing rain to eastern districts as far south as Christchurch and also to Northland.

The period from the 16th to the 22nd showed a marked predominance of south-westerlies. On the 16th an anticyclone was centred over Victoria and pressures were low to the east and south of New Zealand. On this and the following day a trough of low pressure crossed the country with fairly general rain, mainly light. During the next 2 days the anticyclone advanced on to New South Wales but pressures remained very low to the east and south of New Zealand, and many gales were reported from the 17th to the 19th. Showers affected the Southland and Otago coast, the West Coast, and most western districts of the North Island. As pressures rose to the east and the anticyclone passed to the north of the North Island from the 20th to the 22nd winds became somewhat more westerly, but showers affected much the same districts.

From the 23rd to the 25th pressures were low over the South Tasman Sea. One depression was centred near Tasmania, while another one, just west of Southland, moved slowly south-eastward.

Rain was fairly general but quite light in most eastern districts of the South Island and in eastern and northern districts of the North Island.

With pressures again low to the south and east, there was a return to south-westerlies on the 26th, bringing showers to Southland and Otago, besides Fiordland and Buller, and some western districts of the North Island. During the next 2 days a deep depression passed to the south and the associated trough of low pressure brought fairly general rain, which was however light, east of the ranges. On the last 2 days of the month pressures were low to the east of the North Island and another trough crossed the country with a return to south-westerly conditions, bringing showers to most western districts besides parts of Southland and Otago.
