The "normal" refers to the present site of the instruments. Standard period for normals is 1941-70.

No normals are available for stations with only short records.

*Indicates that the sunshine recorder is not located at the station but is in the near vicinity.

A rain day is a day with rainfall equal to or greater than 0.1 mm.

Where the extremes of temperature and rainfall have occurred more than once during the month, the date of the first occurrence is given.

NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR OCTOBER 1975

General—October was marked by an unusually high frequency of easterly winds over the northern half of the North Island, bringing considerable cloud and rain to these areas. It was a good month for dairy production, and most farmers in the North Island found it a favourable month for growth.

Rainfall—Rainfall was above normal over most of the North Island from Ruapehu northward, and over northern and eastern districts of the South Island as far south as Waimate. It was more than double the normal value in most of eastern Northland, in Coromandel, over inland Bay of Plenty, and also on the North Canterbury coast. In eastern Northland and Coromandel two-thirds of the rain fell from the 8th to the 13th. At Hikurangi, north of Whangarei, 256 mm was recorded in the 3 days from the 9th to the 11th. Flooding was reported in both areas, with easterly gales.

Rainfall less than three-quarters of the normal value was reported in only a few districts, mainly in the southern half of the North Island.

Temperatures—Temperatures were above normal by about 1°C over nearly the whole of the North Island, with highest departures in Waikato-King Country. They were below normal by about ½°C in Southland and South Otago and in the Mackenzie Basin.

Wide variations in temperature occurred, especially in Canterbury and Otago. Two of the coldest days were the 19th and the 27th, with maxima at Christchurch of only 9°C. On the 19th a fall of snow was reported on the upper Canterbury Plains around Methven.

Sunshine—Sunshine was below normal in most northern and eastern districts of the North Island by 20-70 hours. Kaitiaki received only 134 hours, the lowest on record for October, while Gisborne received only 142 hours. In most western districts from New Plymouth to Wellington and also over the greater part of Canterbury, sunshine was above normal by 25-60 hours. Paraparaumu received the unusually high total of 237 hours.

Weather Sequence—At the beginning of October an anticyclone was passing to the south of the country, while a depression to the east of the North Island was moving away. Some light showers were reported in Gisborne, Otago, and Southland. On the following day the anticyclone was centred east of the South Island while a complex depression covered the northern and central Tasman Sea. Showers were reported in a number of areas, especially in the South Island. On the 3rd and 4th one depression was situated west of the North Island while the other centre moved away to the south. Rain was fairly general, with some heavy falls on the Kaikoura coast. Temperatures were rather cold, as they had been since the beginning of the month. During the following 2 days the depression to the west of the North Island moved northward and was centred near North Cape. Rain was restricted mainly to some northern and eastern districts of the North Island and temperatures remained cold in the east. On the 7th an anticyclone covered the country with centres to west and east, and the weather was mainly fair and somewhat warm.

On the 8th the weather deteriorated in the north and northeast of the North Island with the approach of a depression close to Northland. In addition the weather deteriorated in Fiordland and parts of Southland and Otago with the advance of a weak trough of low pressure in that area. During the next 3 days an anticyclone, initially to the east of the South Island, moved slowly away, while the depression remained centred close to North Cape. Gales and heavy rain lashed some east coast areas from Coromandel to Whangarei, with flooding. Rain affected other northern and eastern districts of the North Island as far south as Hamilton and Waipukurau. During the next 2 days pressures remained low to the north and west with the advance of another depression over the Tasman Sea, and warm northerly winds brought rain. Some considerable falls were reported in Bay of Plenty and on the West Coast.

On the 14th and 15th an anticyclone was centred over the North Island while a deep depression passed to the south of Campbell Island. In the westerlies rain was mainly reported in the west and south of the South Island, and temperatures were warm, especially in Canterbury and Otago. During the next 2 days another small depression developed close to Northland. Considerable rain set in over most northern districts of the North Island with some also in Gisborne and Hawke's Bay, besides the West Coast and Southland. Some heavy falls were reported in the Bay of Plenty, with flooding.

On the 18th and 19th a depression developed near Cook Strait and deepened rapidly as it moved away to the east, while pressures were high over the North Tasman Sea. Cold southerlies covered most of the country, with rain mainly in eastern and northern districts of the South Island and in southern and western districts of the North Island. Snow was reported in parts of Canterbury, particularly around Methven. On the following day, as the depression moved away, some showers persisted in the Gisborne ranges, and temperatures were still rather cool.

During the 21st and 22nd a depression over the Central Tasman Sea moved over Southland and the associated trough of low pressure crossed the country. Rain was reported west of the ranges in both Islands and also in Southland, while temperatures became very warm in Otago and Canterbury. During the next 2 days another trough of low pressure brought a cool south-westerly change, with rain on the West Coast and in parts of Southland. On the 25th another very deep depression over the South Tasman Sea moved along the Southland coast, and rain was again reported mainly west of the ranges. On the following day another depression followed a somewhat more northerly path, reaching the area off the Westland coast. Rain now spread also to eastern districts of the South Island, where temperatures became very warm.

On Labour Day, the 27th, the depression drifted towards Cook Strait, with an associated trough of low pressure almost stationary east to west in the same area. Rain covered the northern half of the South Island besides considerable areas of the North Island, especially around Cook Strait. Temperatures became colder again in the east of the South Island. As the depression drifted further northward on the following day rain affected some northern districts of the North Island. On the 29th a depression passed far to the south-west and the associated trough of low pressure brought rain to the West Coast and Southland, besides some showers in Canterbury and Otago, where temperatures became warm once again. On the following day a deep depression formed east of Otago and there was a cold southerly change, with light rain mainly in the north-east of the South Island and the south-west of the North Island. On the last day of the month an anticyclone moved over the North Island and the weather was fine but still cool.
