NEWSMAKERS

Mr Bell wrote first to the Tribunal in June to complain about the Newsmakers programme in which the Minister of Maori Affairs and Minister of Police, Hon. M. B. R. Couch, M.P., was interviewed about the Springbok tour. Mr Bell said the interviewer, Mr Ian Fraser, had been capable of high level performances in his interviewing but when his own convictions were firm he could exhibit prejudice to such a degree that the performance was objectionable. He considered that occurred when he interviewed Mr Couch. Mr Bell did not believe, necessarily, that a TV interviewer should not have his own views about matters under discussion but the views should not obtrude to an unpleasant degree.

His complaint was sent on to the Corporation where it was dealt with as a formal complaint. The Corporation examined the complaint in relation to section 24 (1) (d) of the Broadcasting Act 1976 (which relates to the accurate and impartial gathering and presentation of news according to recognised standards of objective journalism) and to 2 rules of the Television Programme Rules and Standards.

The first required broadcasters to deal justly and fairly with any person taking part in any programme and the other requires broadcasters to show balance, impartiality and fairness in dealing with political matters, current affairs and all questions of a controversial nature.

The Corporation replied to Mr Bell as follows:

The Board had regard to the view that a Cabinet Minister could be expected to respond to a wide range of diverse issues affecting his portfolios and government policy, and thought that where there are issues of public concern which can be elucidated to give viewers a clearer understanding there is a responsibility on the part of an interviewer to examine subjects in depth. A "devil's advocate" role is how an interviewer's approach is commonly described. This can sometimes be misconstrued as bias, but was not considered to be so in this case.

The Board acknowledged that the interview had aroused considerable public comment and debate but when it was subjected to critical analysis members concluded that there had not been any breach of the requirements of the Act or the rules. It noted that the Minister himself acknowledged that the interviewer was very experienced, and had commented publicly that "it is his job, and he did it well".

The Board respected your views of the interview, but could not reconcile the feelings you have about it with the actual performance. I have been asked to advise you accordingly, that your complaint was not upheld.

Mr Bell then referred the complaint to the Tribunal stating that Mr Fraser, when conducting the interview with Mr Couch, was obviously prejudiced against the Springbok tour and was not adopting a "devil's advocate" viewpoint as the BCNZ suggested.

He added a further objection that the programme was just one of "an orchestra of programmes on the Springbok tour that took a consistent anti-tour stance—without giving the pro-tour people a chance to adequately state their case."

The Tribunal did not consider the further objection. This had not been put to the Corporation and did not form part of the original complaint.

However the Tribunal has considered the original complaint in relation to the 3 standards set out by the Corporation, after viewing a tape recording of the programme.

The Tribunal has come to the conclusion that there are no grounds for upholding the complaint.

First, Mr Couch accepted an invitation to appear on the programme and to be interviewed by Mr Fraser. Mr Couch was in the position of the Cabinet which supported the Gleneagles Agreement. That agreement required the Government to discourage the Springbok tour while Mr Couch clearly stated he supported the tour. Much of the interview was taken up in establishing Mr Couch's views, the Government's position and Mr Fraser's endeavouring to reconcile apparent inconsistencies between the two.

It is difficult to see how Mr Fraser could have taken any other tack, given the position the Minister took in the interview. He approached the stage of direct argument with the Minister, but that was understandable at the point where it occurred. Mr Fraser confronted the Minister forcefully with his earlier statements in the interview and suggested they were irreconcilable.

The fact that it may have been seen that Mr Couch was having difficulty in dealing with the questions is not justification for an interviewer to soften his approach. The Minister's responsibilities could be expected to equip him to deal with the questions. The questions were not inappropriate to the issues raised and the context of the interview.

The complaint is misconceived so far as it relates to the allegation that Mr Fraser did not adopt a devil's advocate role.

It cannot be any ground for complaint that the questions being put in an interview happen to put forward a particular viewpoint which the interviewer might personally hold. The relevance of the interviewer's views arises only where they might have affected the proper conduct of the interview. Mr Fraser relentlessly pursued his lines of questioning but there was no ground for a finding of impropriety.

The Tribunal sent Mr Couch a copy of the complaint and the relevant standards. He was invited to comment. In his reply Mr Couch said:

"Your letter puts me in a difficult position. On the one hand, I stand by the comments I made at the time. On the other, I appreciate Mr Bell's loyalty, and I do not want to say anything that would appear to contradict him."

After referring to hundreds of letters he had received, criticising Mr Fraser, Mr Couch concluded:

"I did my best, in my replies, to make it safer for Mr Fraser to walk down dark alleys at night; as, indeed, I did in my public statement at the time . . . All I can say is that (a) I did not inspire any complaints; and (b) that I shall not be wielding any blunt instrument personally."

The Tribunal must hesitate to find in a complaint that a person was unfairly treated when that person declines to support the allegation. There is, in the programme, no evidence of unfair treatment.

Likewise a careful review of the programme does not show that there was a failure to observe section 24 (1) (d) although this section has obvious limitations in its application to a current affairs programme compared with the presentation of news.

The Tribunal cannot find any justification for an allegation that the programme shows that the Corporation has failed to show balance, impartiality and fairness.

The complaint is not upheld.

We observe (without implying criticism) that one of the factors leading to this complaint could well have been the changing format and content of the Newsmakers series.

Mr Fraser has in other programmes adopted a similarly strong line of questioning when dealing with proponents of other views on this controversy.

However the mixture of hard and soft interviews, chairing discussions and bringing people to the studio for general debate, could lead to some confusion in the viewer's mind as Mr Fraser varies his approach according to the nature of the individual programme.

Before the Broadcasting Tribunal

IN the matter of the Broadcasting Act 1976, and in the matter of a complaint by Kenneth MacKenzie.

WARRANT HOLDER: Broadcasting Corporation of New Zealand—(Network 1):

B. H. Slane Chairman,
Lionel R. Sceats, Member,
Janet C. Somerville, Member,
Gordon C. Ell, Co-opted Member,
S. H. Gardiner, Co-opted Member.

Decision

Mr MacKenzie's complaint is about one of the programmes in the Open Pulpit series broadcast on 27 July 1980 in which Canon Lowe interviewed a Maori activist. On 10 August 1980 Mr MacKenzie complained about the programme to the Chairman of the Corporation and the letter was referred to Television New Zealand who replied to Mr MacKenzie. He had intended however that his letter be treated as a formal complaint and this was subsequently done after he had approached the Registrar of the Tribunal.

The Corporation then considered whether the language used constituted a breach of section 24 (1) (c) Broadcasting Act 1976 relating to the observance of good taste and decency and whether its screening time of 6 p.m. was in contravention of the Television Rule requiring broadcasters to be mindful of the effect any programme may have on children during their generally accepted viewing periods. The Corporation decided that the guests comments on the programme taken in isolation might seem to be contrary to standards of good taste but it was clear that they should be assessed in the context of the discussion and the manner of delivery. It also recognised that Canon Lowe was asking questions and making comment which served as a counter balance during a relaxed and free flowing discussion which resulted in some quite significantly revealing points being made in relation to his guest's outlook and that of some Maori people.

As the activist was well known the programme served to give a penetrating perspective of the man and it was felt had it been edited or certain words "bleeped" the nature and character of the man could have been distorted.

The Corporation said the Television Rules required broadcasters to take into consideration currently accepted norms of decency and taste in language and behaviour, bearing in mind the context in which any language or behaviour occurred, and also to acknowledge the right of individuals to express their own opinion. Therefore in the context of the programme the Board did not consider the complaint could be upheld in relation to the observance of good taste and decency.

As to the other parts, the programme constituted adult viewing and should not have been screened at 6 p.m. The complaint in that respect was upheld.

The Corporation said that to prevent a repetition, the question of religious programme content and scheduling aspects is to be the subject of further examination by the Corporation.

Mr MacKenzie decided to refer his complaint to the Tribunal.

The Tribunal approaches the decision on the basis that Mr MacKenzie's complaint has been upheld as to the showing of the programme at that time.

However it is difficult to divorce a consideration of the appropriate standards of good taste and decency from the time of showing and the nature of the programme in which the questioned items appear.

We have come to the conclusion the complaint should be upheld in part. We would go a little further than the Corporation and say that there was an unnecessary broadcasting of bad language having regard to the type of audience which the programme sought to serve.

We note that Canon Lowe tended to talk over some of the statements that would be objectionable and some were in fact hard to hear. In considering the language used we cannot consider the programme in isolation from its time of broadcast, its intended audience and the fact that it was recorded.

Mr MacKenzie was concerned that the question of blasphemy had been entirely overlooked. If blasphemy is taken to include impious references then one might expect that if they were to occur on television they could certainly occur in a religious programme of this kind which is discussing and debating religious topics. The question posed by the rules is a different one, whether such references cross the boundary of good taste and decency. The references to Jesus we find do not cross the borderline in the context of the programme and the type of discussion that was being undertaken and the level on which it was being conducted.

We see some value in this type of programme creating awareness of another point of view.

That the views may have been put strongly must be balanced against the fact that they were told in relation to a story and were repeated as a quotation. Canon Lowe's presence balanced those views and indeed he actively countered them, interrupting to do so.

We emphasise in making this decision that the Tribunal is not concerned with exercising its members personal tastes or standards on such questions but endeavours to reflect what it considers to be current community standards.

The Tribunal was not required to consider whether or not the programme should have been broadcast at 6 p.m. as the Corporation has already ruled that the broadcast of the programme was in breach of Rule 1.1 (c) which requires broadcasters to be mindful of the effect any programme might have on children during their generally accepted viewing periods.

The complaint is upheld in relation to the use of bad language. The Tribunal observes that the series was intended for family viewing. If it was not desired to screen it at another time then there appears to be no reason why the programme could not have been edited to delete the offending words.

The complaint is not upheld in respect of the alleged blasphemous references.
