Decision No. 23/86

Com. 6/85

Before the Broadcasting Tribunal

IN the matter of the Broadcasting Act 1976, and in the matter of a complaint by THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTION OF COMMUNITY STANDARDS INC.:

Warrant Holder: BCNZ (TELEVISION TWO):

Chairman: B. H. Slane.

Member: Ann E. Wilson.

Co-opted Members: Ruth-Mary James and Marie Bell.

DECISION

IN November 1985 the Society for Promotion of Community Standards Inc. filed a complaint about a programme broadcast on Television Two at 9 p.m. on 4 August 1985 called "Growing Up Gay in Godzone" which was part of the Viewfinder series. The society claimed that the programme was in breach of the corporation's responsibility as outlined in section 24 (1) (e) of the Broadcasting Act 1976.

That section reads:

"(1) The Corporation shall be responsible for maintaining, in its programme and its presentation, standards which will be generally acceptable in community, and in particular it shall have regard to—

(e) The principle that when controversial issues of public importance are discussed, reasonable efforts are made to present significant points of view either in the same programme or in other programmes within the period of current interest."

The particulars of the complaint, as required in the formal complaint form, were stated in a letter dated 19 August 1985, addressed to the Broadcasting Corporation of New Zealand and filed in support of the complaint made to this Tribunal. In that letter Miss Bartlett stated:

"The programme purported to deal with the attitude and experience of young people who claimed to be lesbians and gay males. This programme was a blatant misuse and exploitation of young people to support the attitudes of the homosexual community who are prepared to use any media to justify their perverted life style.

In the programme, school children were portrayed as expressing their preferences for friendship and companionship of persons of their own sex, and apparently loudly claiming therefore to be 'gay', lesbians and homosexual males. It is quite normal for children before pubertal change to prefer companionship and friendship with persons of their own sex. This is neither lesbianism in females nor homosexuality in males.

It is well known that boys up to the age of 15 or 16 not only prefer male friends, but are ridiculed by their peers if they show undue interest in girls. This is normal and natural.

By the same process, girls will prefer female friendship and companionship until past their commencement of menstruation. To portray school girls on network television claiming they were lesbians because they had always preferred girl companions, is a travesty of the true situation. What they were expressing is normal and natural preferences. The programme was therefore biased against the truth, claiming perversion when any mature person with a knowledge of human development would have quickly pointed out that what these children were saying, presumably voluntarily, was not correct, but was an expression of normal experience. To make it worse, there were obviously some mature homosexual persons introduced into the programme to provide some measure of credibility.

There was no contrary view included in the programme to show up the obvious distortion of the whole programme for what it was—a misuse of innocent children to support the perverted practices of the homosexual community."

The society had first complained to the Broadcasting corporation who had not upheld their complaint. The complaint had then been made to the Tribunal. It was referred to the corporation who replied at some length, outlining the purpose of the programme and the careful consideration given to it by the producer and director of the programme.

The Tribunal, including the co-opted members, watched a video tape of the programme and considered the arguments put by both parties.

At the beginning of the programme it was made clear that the purpose of the programme was to present the feelings and views of young people who were "Growing Up Gay in Godzone". The comment was made that although there had been much public debate of what was undoubtedly a controversial issue, the feelings of people in this situation had been ignored.

The BCNZ supplied a copy of the entry in the Listener outlining the programme:

"The issue of homosexual law reform has stirred up strong emotions and the arguments on both sides have been thoroughly aired. But we are not just talking about an issue—we are talking about people, and their voices have been lost in the debate. Michael talks to some young New Zealanders about their lives and hopes and what it is like Growing Up Gay in Godzone."

The BCNZ also said in its letter of 23 December 1985 that:

"Viewfinder is a current issues programme for young adults. Its purpose is journalistic—not didactic. Its brief is to look at events of topical interest from the perspective of its target audience."

The Tribunal is of the view that the programme was aimed at expressing the views of young people who regard themselves as gay. It felt that the approach taken was to explore the feelings of these people and that the programme was neither pro nor anti homosexual debate, and therefore the Tribunal finds that there was no element of bias in the programme in the way suggested by the complainant.

The society appears to hold the view that it is not possible to present a programme that interviews people on their own terms. Just because the people interviewed are homosexuals does not mean that heterosexuals have to appear in the same programme. These people were interviewed about their feelings and such expression is valid in itself.

The society suggested that the programme was "a blatant misuse and exploitation of young people to support the attitudes of the homosexual community who are prepared to use any media to justify their perverted life style". In fact no suggestion at all was made in the programme that homosexuality was a good thing.

The society also alleged that the programme was a "misuse of innocent children to support the perverted practices of the homosexual community". The BCNZ pointed out that these "children" were aged between 15 and 19 and that all took part only after careful explanation of the possible consequences of appearing on television. The 15 year old's parents not only consented to her participation, but took part themselves. We wonder whether any of the participants, or indeed any one of that age, would accept the term "children" and feel that the society's description is hardly fair.

The society's view was the programme was biased in two ways:

1. It was biased against the truth because any one with a knowledge of human development would know that what these children were saying was an expression of normal experience.
2. Because it made no reference to the fact that young persons apparently submitting preferences to sexual relations with members of the same sex can be counselled and influenced away from such behaviour.

The society's approach to human development is not the only one. There are arguments and evidence that environmental factors are strong influences and some argue that what the society views as normal and natural may not necessarily be so.

Also controversial is the society's view that people can be counselled away from such behaviour. It is now frequently argued that sexual development is fixed very early in life, perhaps by the age of 2. This is long before any one can be counselled away from anything.

The programme showed mainly homosexuals who were happy with their lifestyle. People who were comfortable with themselves and confident of the rightness of their position for them. Undoubtedly it is not like that for many.

It also may be an aspect that is difficult to present. Those who are not happy would not be likely to stand up and say so. The programme emphasised supportive families and friends but people who had thrown their children out, or perhaps even those who had rejected friends, would not easily stand up and say so. However the programme could of course have made reference to the fact that the programme shows how it is for some but that it may be different for others.

This leads us to point out that the visual and aural messages in this programme are very different. The overall impression a casual viewer could be left with was of homosexuals who had themselves and their situations fairly well sorted, who were happy, smiling, confident. They were seen that way. However several participants were saying that things were not really quite so good. They spoke of family pressure, of praying that they would change, of not wanting to be the way they were. A particular example would be the impression the programme gave about parents of homosexual youngsters. There was some time devoted to the parents of a 15 year old girl who were very supportive of her and there were verbal comments from 3 of the young men about the lack of support that they had received from their parents. There was no visual image of unsupportive parents and the overall impression was of caring support for the children. The visual image was much stronger than the aural one.

The Tribunal is of the view that this programme, which handled a difficult subject, was done with sensitivity and perception. The programme explored the feelings of the participants. It raised questions about the topic and did not try to say "this is the right way ...". It was journalistic and not didactic in approach.

The society considered that a less-biased programme to offset the damage likely to have been done to the large number of young persons who viewed the programme should be shown. The Tribunal is of the view that this programme would not be likely to have done damage to young persons who have viewed it.

It was sensitively presented and shown at a time when the very young would be unlikely to be watching. Also it was presented in a format which did not attempt to sensationalise and for that reason might not have held the attention of very young people for the full half hour anyway.

The Tribunal is not satisfied that the programme required a statement of other views on homosexuality. It embarked on and confined itself to some actual experiences at first hand. It did not require "balancing" material as the programme identified some of the disadvantages experienced by the participants. The issues raised by the society were outside the ambit of the programme.

In view of the publicity on television and elsewhere arising from the debate on homosexual law reform, the Tribunal does not find any need for other viewpoints to be presented on these issues.

Com. 4/85

Before the Broadcasting Tribunal

IN the matter of the Broadcasting Act 1976, and in the matter of a complaint by ANTHONY JOHN SIMPSON of Wellington, writer:

Warrant Holder: THE BROADCASTING CORPORATION OF NEW ZEALAND, Television One:

Chairman: B. H. Slane

Members: Ann E. Wilson and Robert Boyd-Bell.

Co-opted Members: S. H. Gardiner and W. Sellwood.

DECISION

MR Simpson lodged a formal complaint in respect of some programmes which he said he did "because recent developments in your programming raise interesting philosophical questions and it seems to me that the use of the formal complaints machinery enables these to be discussed in a fruitful way."

A considerable correspondence ensued and it is not necessary for the Tribunal to traverse that.

It is sufficient to say that the Tribunal has dealt with the complaint as being in respect of a programme Alison Holst Cooks and specifically in relation to a repeat series of that programme in 1985.

The first screening of the programme was on a Friday, then a non-commercial day.

In referring the complaint to the Tribunal, when it was not upheld by the corporation, Mr Simpson indicated that he was dissatisfied in one respect and he summarised it as follows:

"(i) If money changed hands to pay the corporation for doing this then this means that in one sense the entire programme, e.g., Alison Holst Cooks, is an advertisement for the book because the promotion of the book which is a commercial property, the sales of which, are presumably increased by such featuring becomes indistinguishable from the programme. The two are an entity. This seems to me to offend against the requirement of advertising rule 1.1 which requires that advertisements should be clearly distinguishable from other programme material.

(ii) In an opinion given in June 1984 the BCNZ office solicitor is recorded as being of the view that a voice-over given at the end of a programme advising of the availability of books is a community service acknowledgement. With respect to Mr Hudson I cannot concur in this view. Even if no money has changed hands this is still in my submission a commercial announcement. It clearly promotes a commercial product. If money does change hands then in my view there is absolutely no doubt that the practise conforms to the definition of an advertising programme in the Broadcasting Act itself. I have no knowledge of course as to whether the publishers or distributors of the book or any other person pays to have this information conveyed. But above all else it seems inappropriate for commercial information of this sort to be conveyed on Sundays or on Channel One on Fridays which are both I believe non-commercial periods. At least that is how I understand the BCNZ warrants."

He later added the following comment:

"Would you please note that my complaint was not solely concerned with the promotion of commercial products on non-commercial nights, but with the matter of a failure to distinguish between programmes and commercial messages also."

The definition of 'advertising programme' in the Broadcasting Act is:

"'Advertising programme' means a programme or part of a programme intended to promote the interests of any person, or to promote any product or service for the commercial advantage of any person, and for which, in either case, payment is made, whether in money or otherwise."

The advertisement rules contained in the Television Standards and Rules, include the following:

"'Sponsored material' means any matter (other than advertising programmes) which is not purchased by a television service or produced wholly at the cost of the service.

'Sponsor' means a person or organisation meeting the cost of sponsored material.

1.1 Advertisements shall be clearly distinguishable from other programme material.

4.1 Sponsored material may be broadcast by a television service provided that it does not relinquish editorial rights or control over the extent and the presentation of such material, and provided that the association of a sponsor with a programme is acknowledged in the programme credits.

5.1 The total amount of time given to advertisements shall not exceed 9 minutes per hour averaged over a days programmes.

5.2 In any 2-hour period there shall not be more than 20 minutes of advertising time."

The following facts emerge from the correspondence.

The programme, as was acknowledged in the programme credits, was presented "in association with Beckett Publishing and the Potato Board". This sponsorship acknowledgement is a requirement under rule 4.1 and a viewing of the programme will show that TVNZ did not relinquish editorial rights or control over the extent and presentation of the material. The corporation refers the Tribunal to the definition of sponsored material that it is any matter which is not purchased by a television service or produced wholly at the cost of a service.

Television New Zealand Enterprises issued a "TV Tie-in" pamphlet which referred to books which may have a link with television series and is regarded as an advertising vehicle. For consideration paid by BCNZ Enterprises which covers the cost of the leaflet, books are promoted in the leaflet and distributed to the New Zealand book trade. The corporation claims that the leaflet itself is the advertising vehicle and not the programmes in question.

At the end of the programme the following statement is made:

"The recipes demonstrated in this programme also appear in the book Alison Holst Cooks."

In its response to the complaint the corporation told the Tribunal that it did not consider there was any featuring of books associated with particular programmes. It denied that there was an invitation to purchase the book and explained that the wording of the announcement was intended as a community service because, based on past experience, viewers telephoned or wrote in asking how they could get copies of the recipes and it was considered to be in the public interest to include in the programme an appropriate announcement. There was no mention in the announcement of the publisher or any retailer from whom the cookery book could be bought. It was a practise considered akin to that of indicating on screen the name of the novel from which a major television drama series may have been adapted. There was no exhortation to go out and buy the book nor to seek it out in a library. The Corporation submitted that such brief wording did not convert the 15 minutes cooking programme into an advertisement. There was no intention to promote the interests of any person or to promote any product or service for the commercial advantage of any person. No payment was specifically made for the statement to be made.

The corporation argued that as there was no advertisement then there could have been no breach of the rule requiring an advertisement to be clearly distinguishable from other programme material.

The Broadcasting Act defines an advertising programme clearly. The Broadcasting Rules clearly define sponsored material. We take it therefore that as the corporation clearly states the programme is sponsored material, the programme was not purchased by the television service or produced wholly at the cost of the service. Therefore the sponsors, the Potato Board and Beckett Publishing, have met at least part of the costs of the sponsored material.

It would be naive to suggest that they did so as a community service rather than because they considered it would promote the interests of the Potato Board or potatoes or books published by Beckett Publishing. The Tribunal considers payment is made to the corporation when there is a contribution to the cost of production of the programme when that programme is intended to promote the interests of any person (i.e., the sponsors) or their products for the commercial advantage of the sponsors.

The Tribunal therefore finds that a programme partly paid for by sponsors with the intention of promoting their own interests or the interests of their product to a commercial advantage of any person is an advertising programme.

The fact that sponsored material is permitted by the advertising rules cannot modify the definition of an advertising programme.

Therefore if the programme was broadcast on a day when advertising programmes were not permitted, there was a breach of the warrants.

It follows that there was a failure clearly to distinguish the advertising material from the other programme matter as indeed would no doubt be conceded by the corporation since it did not consider it was broadcasting an advertisement.

With regard to the statement made about the availability of the book, the Tribunal does not believe that the statement in itself constitutes an advertisement. It considers that it is reasonable to make such information available provided there is no payment for doing so directly or indirectly. In this case it is inherently part of the programme which we have found to be an advertising programme. If we had not so found the programme then we do not believe, on the facts as we have them, that the broad statement made could be proved to be intended to promote the interests of the publisher.

We would point out that we have considered this complaint only on the basis of some correspondence and without sworn evidence and cross-examination of witnesses. It may well be that a different conclusion might be arrived at in relation to the reference to the availability of the book but on balance we cannot uphold the complaint in that respect. We would however point out that there is a fine distinction and the fact that Beckett Publishing were prepared to sponsor the programme at least raises the possibility that that statement itself would constitute an advertisement.

We have found that the programme as a whole did constitute an advertisement and therefore there was a failure to distinguish advertisements from other material.

We note that the Broadcasting Amendment Act 1985 which came into force on 29 March 1985, inserted a new section 73A to remove from the warrants the definition of when advertising programmes could be broadcast and made statutory provision for advertising days and hours. Subsection (2) of the new section 73A provides that nothing in the new Act prevents the inclusion in a programme broadcast from a television station on a Sunday of a credit in respect of a sponsorship arrangement made under the rules.

It is to be noted that the subsection does not alter the definition of an advertisement but merely excuses the broadcast of sponsorship credits on Sundays. It would not deal with, for instance, the nub of Mr Simpson's complaint that advertising programmes are not sufficiently distinguished from other programmes in a case such as that complained about.

It is also appropriate to mention that it is quite possible that a contribution to a programme by a sponsor would not in every case constitute the programme an advertising programme. The mere acknowledgement in a programme credit for instance that a company was a sponsor of a programme on opera would not constitute that programme necessarily an advertising programme unless the programme or part of it was intended to promote the interests of that sponsor or to promote any product or service for the commercial advantage of that sponsor. We do not find that the mere acknowledgement of the name of the supporter or contributor to a programme in this respect is intended to be caught by the definition of advertising programme.

It is different of course where the programme is more obviously intended to promote the interests of a person, product or service for the commercial advantage of any person. The Tribunal also observes that it may be appropriate for the corporation to reveal more publicly the extent of its sponsorship if it seeks to rationalise these situations with the appropriate amendments to legislation. It may well be considered reasonable that, in watching the programme, the viewers should know whether or not the Potato Board is paying for the whole programme or whether it has only made a minor contribution. The host's emphasis on the use of potatoes can then be considered in the light of the extent of their support for the programme.

This complaint has revealed the necessity to rationalise the situation. In view of the extension of advertising days, the Rules Committee should consider amendments to the rules as to advertising minutes in the case of sponsored material and the rules relating to clearly distinguishing programme from advertising material.
