Decision No. 1/87
COM 5/86

Before the Broadcasting Tribunal

IN the matter of the Broadcasting Act 1976, and in the matter of a complaint by CLIFFORD REGINALD TURNER of Hamilton:

WARRANT HOLDER—BROADCASTING CORPORATION OF NEW ZEALAND (TELEVISION NEW ZEALAND):

Chairman: B. H. Slane.

Members: Ann E. Wilson and Robert Boyd-Bell.

Co-opted Members: Brian W. Stephenson and Wayne Sellwood.

DECISION

THIS complaint arose from the broadcast of a trailer for the television programme The Equalizer by Television One on Saturday, 1 March 1986 at about 8.30 p.m.

The Programme

The trailer was intended to promote an episode of The Equalizer series titled "The Defector". The BCNZ summarised the episode as telling the story of a Russian administrator working for the Russian embassy in America who attempted to defect when his life was endangered. An error in the "cross-over" caused him to be killed. His ballerina daughter was abducted by the Russians wanting to send her back to Russia but she was rescued by "The Equalizer".

The 28-second trailer was a compilation of excerpts from that episode. It featured an incident where a man was pushed into a public pond, some conversation between the Russian and Woodward (the Equalizer), some machine gunning and a close-up death scene, the Russian's dying request for Woodward to look after his daughter, her abduction, further machine gunning followed by Woodward shooting with a handgun and another man diving through a glass window.

The Complaint

Mr Turner lodged a formal complaint with the Broadcasting Corporation on 3 March 1986 claiming that:

"This trailer was of a violent nature; a man was shot and a close-up of his anguished face was shown. It is difficult to believe that this programme would 'sharpen human sensibilities' but the rules say that this is a condition to be observed when depicting violence. The rules also say that violence is permitted in a suitable dramatic context but in this case there was no context."

The Corporation's Response

The BCNZ Board considered this complaint from Mr Turner among others at its meeting on 30 April. The Secretary of the Corporation, Mr I. H. McLean, responded to Mr Turner on 9 May. In his letter Mr McLean said:

"Your complaint concerning The Equalizer trailer was considered in the context of the passage under Appendix A of the rules which is headed Programme Trailers. It was noted that in your letter you quoted from the introductory guideline passage of the appendix in support of your complaint rather than the specific passage relating to trailers.

It was also noted that the trailer in question included two of the excerpts from the programme which were the lynchpin of the episode. It was considered to have been characteristic of the programme and compiled responsibly, and did not include gratuitous violence. The board was unable to conclude that the trailer was in breach of the rule in question, and your complaint in this respect was not upheld."

Reference to the Tribunal

Mr Turner was not satisfied. Referring his complaint to the tribunal he said he considered that the trailer did not meet the requirements of rule 2 of Appendix A and that the complaint had not been considered against the requirements in Appendix A of the Television Standards and Rules.

He added that:

"The board of the corporation appear to have considered my complaint against rule 5 of Appendix A. This rule says that trailers must not be uncharacteristic of the programme as a whole. The implication is that very violent programmes can be promoted by very violent trailers and the trailers need only be considered against rule 5. I believe that is nonsensical and that trailers and any other material should be considered against the rules as a whole."

The Corporation's Position

In its written submission in reply, the corporation expanded on its original response to Mr Turner, while holding to the key elements in its letter of 9 May.

Mr McLean submitted that Mr Turner did not appreciate that Appendix A is a guideline provision with 5 subsections which serve to give guide points for the different and varying types of programme content which may embrace incidents of violent action. He said section 5 of the appendix titled "Programme Trailers" was considered to be the relevant guideline against which Mr Turner's complaint should be assessed.

The corporation argued that the tests expressed in Appendix A, that violence in programmes should aim to sharpen not blunt human sensitivities and should be justified by dramatic truth, must be seen within the framework of entire programmes.

Mr McLean stated:

"Such elements would be extremely difficult to conjure up in a 30 seconds trailer, hence the separate guidelines under section 5 of the Appendix to take care of violence which may be presented in such trailers."

He later summarised the corporation case:

"The corporation considered the Appendix A requirements had been met as the trailer was characteristic of the programme, was compiled responsibly, and gave a clear indication of the programme content. Also, it can be shown that by screening the trailer at 8.30 p.m. attention was paid to the likely composition of the audience at the time it played."

DECISION

THE tribunal does not consider that trailers can be exempt from programme rules, whether they be defined as programmes or advertisements.

Programme rule 2.1 states:

"Programmes dealing with violence and horror should observe the guidelines laid down in Appendix A."

Advertisement rule 1.2 states:

"Advertisements, which are a form of programme material, must meet all standards and requirements laid down in the programme rules."

Appendix A sets out a series of guidelines on the portrayal of violence which all programmes (including advertisements) are required to observe.

The preamble to Appendix A states (inter alia):

"Broadcasters . . . acknowledge the need for care and skill in deciding what part it (violence) may be allowed to play in programmes. The use of violence in any programme should aim to sharpen not blunt human sensitivities and its inclusion can only be justified by the dramatic context in which it is seen, and the skill, insight and sensitivity of this depiction."

The 5 specific guidelines which follow are additional to, not exclusive of, the preamble. They call for special care in scenes which may unsettle children, limit the justification of dramatic truth, limit the representation of violence in news and information programmes, limit the freedom to schedule programmes which contain violence and make specific requirements of trailers as follows:

"5. Programme trailers: Trailers which promote programmes containing some violent material should be chosen responsibly and incidents used should not be uncharacteristic of the programme as a whole. Attention should be paid to the likely composition of the audience at the times trailers are presented."

The tribunal does not consider that guideline 5 exempts trailers from meeting the general requirements of Appendix A under programme rule 2.1.

While the corporation submitted that the elements of "dramatic truth" and sharpening of human sensitivities would be extremely difficult to conjure up in a 30-second trailer, that surely is the measure of the care, skill, insight, sensitivity and responsibility which the appendix calls upon broadcasters to observe. The guideline seeks to limit the use in trailers of violent material which may be acceptable in the context of complete programmes.

Turning to the specific trailer in question, the tribunal notes that it was a compilation of incidents, including several violent ones, from one episode of The Equalizer edited to a duration of just under 30 seconds. A viewer could not have been aware of the story-line of the programme at the time the trailer was screened and would have gained little insight into the story from the trailer. The predominant message of the trailer was of 4 or 5 disjointed violent incidents compressed into 30 seconds with no dramatic context.

Each and every one of those incidents may have been justifiable within the dramatic context of the entire programme but they have a different impact when compiled into a brief trailer broadcast in the middle of Saturday evening viewing.

The tribunal notes from the programme listings for Saturday, 1 March 1986 that The Cosby Show was scheduled to be broadcast on Television One from 8 to 8.30 p.m., followed at 8.30 p.m. by The Saturday Premiere Movie, in this case "Murder with Mirrors" based on one of Agatha Christie's Miss Marple stories. The likely composition of the audience for the trailer could be expected to have been a wide cross-section of family viewers, including many children who had just watched The Cosby Show.

The tribunal also notes that the trailer, which included many excerpts of violent action from the programme, was broadcast half an hour earlier than the time the programme itself was scheduled to play.

Guideline 4 of Appendix A refers to the cumulative effect of incidents of violence in individual programmes adding up to an intolerable level over one evening. The tribunal considers that a similar effect may be achieved by excerpting a number of violent incidents from one programme and compiling them into a short trailer.

The minutes of the Television New Zealand internal Complaints Committee consideration of this complaint reveal a view that this trailer was a "nasty promo", a view with which the tribunal has some sympathy.

The tribunal took the opportunity to view a number of programme trailers and notes that the one complained of contained a greater number of violent incidents than any other included on the 60-minute tape provided.

The Complaint is Upheld

The tribunal does not consider that programme trailers are exempted from the general provisions of Appendix A by the existence of guideline 5.

Guideline 5 must be interpreted as imposing even stricter criteria for the inclusion of violent material in trailers than are applicable to complete programmes.

The tribunal does not consider that this trailer was compiled responsibly nor that adequate attention was paid to the likely composition of the audience at the time it was played.

The tribunal regards this breach as an error of judgment in an area where there has been no previous decision on the interpretation of the programme rules relating to programme trailers.

We are aware that Television New Zealand has been reviewing its policy and practice regarding the portrayal of violence on television.

The tribunal considers that the promotion of such programmes should be included in that review.

Co-opted Members

The tribunal co-opted Messrs Stephenson and Sellwood as persons whose qualifications or experience were likely to be of assistance in dealing with the complaint. They took part in the deliberations of the tribunal but the decision is that of the permanent members.

Dated this 19th day of February 1987.

Signed for the tribunal:

B. H. SLANE, Chairman.
