HIH Rating Review

Ratings and Inspections Notice

On the 26th day of February 1998, Winterthur Swiss Insurance Company (Winterthur) announced that it was evaluating its option in relation to its 51 percent shareholding in HIH Winterthur International Holdings Limited (HIH).

At the time of the September 1997 merger of Winterthur with Credit Suisse Group, it was announced that a major review would be undertaken of the global business and strategic holdings of the enlarged group within the context of the merged group's strategy. That review is continuing and no decision has been taken at this time.

Following the announcement on the 26th day of February 1998 by Winterthur that it was evaluating its option regarding its 51 percent shareholding in HIH Winterthur International Holdings Limited, ratings agency Standard and Poor's reviewed the claims paying ability rating of HIH to A (credit watch developing).

The rating reflects a potential stand-alone position of HIH and is based on the strong business franchise and earnings profile and the good growth opportunities available to HIH.

This rating applies to these New Zealand entities:

- HIH Casualty and General Insurance (NZ) Limited.
- CIC Insurance Limited (New Zealand Branch).
- CMG Insurance Company (NZ) Limited.

The rating scale is available for inspection at any office of the above companies.

This notice is made, pursuant to the Insurance Companies (Ratings and Inspections) Act 1994.

Determination G9B: Financial Arrangements That Are Denominated in a Currency Other Than New Zealand Dollars: An Expected Value Approach

This determination may be cited as "Determination G9B: Financial Arrangements that are Denominated in a Currency other than New Zealand Dollars: An Expected Value Approach".

1. Explanation (which does not form part of the determination)

When do you use this determination?

You may use this determination if you have financial arrangements where the rights and obligations under the financial arrangement are fixed or otherwise determined in a currency other than NZD, including variable rate financial arrangements that are denominated in a currency other than NZD.

However, this determination only applies to financial arrangements where the payment dates are known not later than your first balance date after you become a party to the financial arrangement; and forward rates for the currency in which the financial arrangements are denominated can be determined.

What methods can be used to calculate income or expenditure in relation to a financial arrangement that comes within the scope of this determination?

Expected Value Approach

This determination sets out an expected value approach to calculate gross income or expenditure from a financial arrangement where any rights and obligations of the parties are expressed in a base currency other than New Zealand dollars. This base currency might be a foreign currency or a commodity. This expected value approach can only be used for financial arrangements within the scope of this determination, which is narrower than Determination G9A: Financial Arrangements that are Denominated in a Currency or Commodity other than New Zealand Dollars. If you elect to use this determination, you must not use Determination G9A for any such financial arrangement, and you must not use Determination G14: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities for any forward contract within the scope of Determination G14A: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities: An Expected Value Approach.

Mark to Spot Approach

You can use Determination G9A: Financial Arrangements that are Denominated in A Currency or Commodity other than New Zealand Dollars to calculate gross income or expenditure of any financial arrangement within the scope of this determination if you have not used this determination or Determination G14A: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities: An Expected Value Approach.

Alternatively, you may use the mark to market method if you satisfy the requirements of section EH 1 (6) of the Act.

You may also use a method allowed by the proviso to section EH 1 (5) (a) of the Act.

How do I use the method set out in this determination?

Under this method, the gross income or expenditure from a financial arrangement where the rights and obligations of the parties are expressed in a base currency other than New Zealand dollars is the total of an expected component and an unexpected component. To apply this method:

- determine the expected component by taking into account all the base currency payments and payment dates in relation to the financial arrangement when you become a party to the financial arrangement.
- use the initial interest rate to calculate the base currency payments under a variable rate financial arrangement denominated in a base currency other than NZD, and assume that this rate will apply throughout the term of the financial arrangement.
- translate the base currency payments into expected NZD payments on the basis of the forward rates available at the time you become a party to the financial arrangement.
- spread the expected NZD net amount under the yield to maturity method and allocate it to each income year over the term of the financial arrangement on a daily basis.
- measure the unexpected component at the end of each balance date as the difference between actual and expected NZD payments.
- calculate the gross income or expenditure of a financial arrangement entered into before the income year you elect to use this determination as set out above, except that you must:
 - (a) use actual NZD payments up to the income year you elect to use this determination and expected NZD payments for the remaining term of the financial arrangement in determining the expected component of the gross income or expenditure; and
 - (b) use the relevant forward rates at the end of the income year you elect to use this determination for the purpose of calculating the expected NZD payments.

How do I elect to use the method outlined in this determination?

You may elect to use this determination by returning your gross income or expenditure on the basis of this determination for the 1998–1999 income year, or the 1999–2000 income year, or in the first income year in which you become a party to the financial arrangement that is within the scope of this determination.

In the income year you elect to use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure from a financial arrangement entered into before the income year, you must perform a transitional adjustment calculation. This determination provides for a transitional adjustment calculation that is comparable to Determination G25: Variations in the Terms of a Financial Arrangement.

How do I calculate the transitional adjustment?

The transitional adjustment must be made in the income year you elect to use this determination. The transitional adjustment calculation must be made for each financial arrangement entered into before the income year you elect to use this determination. It requires that you treat the difference between the total amount that would have been gross income or expenditure calculated as described in this determination and the total amount actually recognised over the previous income years, as gross income or expenditure in the income year of the adjustment.

How is income or expenditure calculated in the year the financial arrangement matures or is disposed of?

Regardless of which method you choose to use, you must calculate income or expenditure under the base price adjustment in section EH 4 of the Act.

Miscellaneous Issues

This determination requires that where a financial arrangement involves or is expressed in more than one currency or commodity, each separate currency or commodity tranche is to be treated as a separate financial arrangement.

Where a facility provides for the rollover of a financial arrangement, the financial arrangement matures when the rollover occurs. Section EH 4 of the Act applies in the income year the rollover occurs. Any payment arising from the rollover of a financial arrangement will be taken into account under section EH 4 of the Act unless the payment is related to a separate financial arrangement.

2. Reference

This determination is made pursuant to section 90 (1) (c) of the Tax Administration Act 1994.

3. Scope

(1) This determination applies to the calculation of gross income or expenditure from a financial arrangement, to the extent that any right or obligation under the financial arrangement is fixed or otherwise determined in a currency other than NZD and is not fixed in NZD. The payment dates under the financial arrangement must be known not later than the first balance date of the issuer or holder after issue or acquisition.

(2) This determination does not apply to—

- (a) A futures contract;
- (b) A security arrangement;
- (c) A financial arrangement denominated in a currency where the forward rates of the currency cannot be determined; or
- (d) Any financial arrangements covered by the following determinations—
 - Determination G14: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities;
 - Determination G19: Exchange Traded Option Contracts;
 - Determination G20: Discounted Value of Amounts Payable in Relation to Trade Credits Denominated in a Foreign Currency;
 - Determination G21: Discounted Value of Amounts Payable in Relation to Deferred Property Settlements Denominated in a Foreign Currency;
 - Determination G21A: Agreements for Sale and Purchase of Property Denominated in Foreign Currency: Discounted Value of Amounts Payable;
 - Determination G27: Swaps;
 - Determination G29: Agreements for Sale and Purchase of Property Denominated in Foreign Currency: Exchange Rate to Determine the Acquisition Price and Method for Spreading Income and Expenditure;

except as specifically allowed by those determinations.

(3) You may use this determination if

- (a) an election to use this determination is made by returning your income or expenditure on the basis of this determination in the 1998–1999 income year or the 1999–2000 income year or the first income year in which you become a party to the financial arrangements within sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) above; and

(b) Determination G9A: Financial Arrangements that are Denominated in a Currency or Commodity other than New Zealand Dollars is not used to calculate gross income or expenditure of any financial arrangement that is within sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) above; and

(c) Determination G14: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities is not used to calculate gross income or expenditure of any forward contract that is within the scope of Determination G14A: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities: An Expected Value Approach.

(NOTE: A determination to which Determination G9B refers may be changed or rescinded by a new determination made by the Commissioner. In such a case, a reference to the old determination is extended to the new determination.)

4. Principle

(1) If you are a party to a financial arrangement to which this determination applies, the gross income or expenditure in respect of the financial arrangement is calculated by taking into account all amounts arising from the fluctuations of exchange rates or commodity prices.

(2) The gross income or expenditure from the financial arrangement is the total of an expected component and an unexpected component. You must measure the expected component at the time you become a party to the financial arrangement. You must also recognise the unexpected component when it is realised.

(3) To measure the expected component you must convert the base currency payments into expected NZD payments on the basis of forward rates at the time you become a party to the financial arrangement, and spread the expected NZD net amount over the term of the financial arrangement.

(4) You must measure the unexpected component as the difference between the actual NZD payments and the expected NZD payments.

(5) You may use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure of financial arrangements entered into before the income year in which you made the election and in respect of which section EH 4 of the Act does not apply. You must then use this determination for all such financial arrangements. In this case, you must follow the principle set out above except that you must calculate the expected NZD net amount using actual NZD payments up to the end of the income year in which you elect to use this determination and the forward rates at the end of that income year.

Transitional Adjustment

(6) You must perform the transitional adjustment calculation in the income year in which you elect to use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure of any financial arrangement entered into before that income year.

(7) This adjustment ensures that the gross income or expenditure up to the end of the income year in which you elect to use this determination is equal to that that would have been returned if the actual NZD payments and the forward rates, as described in sub-paragraph (5), and this determination had been used since you become a party to the financial arrangement.

5. Interpretation

In this determination:

(1) A reference to the "Act" is a reference to the Income Tax Act 1994.

(2) "Base currency" in relation to a financial arrangement means the currency or commodity in which rights and obligations under the financial arrangement are fixed.

"Covered interest parity" means the proposition that the differential between forward and spot exchange rates is equal to the interest differentials. That is, the forward rate for a foreign currency exchange at time t for 1 period ahead is equivalent to the spot rate at time t , S_t , multiplied by one plus the foreign interest rate, i_f , divided by one plus the domestic interest rate, i_d . Forward rates at time t for n periods, $Fwd_{t,n}$, can thus be derived based on the principle of covered interest parity as

$$Fwd_{t,n} = S_t \frac{(1 + i_f)^n}{(1 + i_d)^n}$$

"Currency" includes any commodity used as a medium of exchange or account, whether in general use or for the purpose of an arrangement.

"Exchange rate" means the price of one currency expressed in another currency.

"Forward rate" means the exchange rate for a forward contract as defined in Determination G6D: Foreign Currency Rates or the forward exchange rate calculated using the principle of covered interest parity or other methods that are commercially acceptable. In the case where the base currency is a commodity, the forward rate is the future value of the commodity (in NZD).

"Financial arrangement" has the same meaning as in the Act: Provided that, where a financial arrangement creates obligations in two or more currencies or commodities and the consideration to be given and received in respect of the obligations in each of the currencies is separately identifiable, the consideration to be given and received in respect of the obligations in each currency will be treated as relating to separate financial arrangements.

"Floating rate arrangement" means a financial arrangement where the interest rate is reset periodically according to a predetermined formula, linking the interest rate to an indicator rate such as the bank bill or interbank rate.

"Future value" in relation to a commodity and a future date means the value of the commodity at the future date, on a given date, derived from any commercially acceptable, market-based method of valuation.

"GBP" means the currency of the United Kingdom.

"Initial interest rate" in relation to a financial arrangement means the interest rate that applies to the first period after the date of issue or acquisition of the financial arrangement.

"Interest" means any periodic payment in relation to the financial arrangement, to the extent intended to provide a return to the lender on the sums provided to the borrower. It does not include fees, discounts, or premiums, or payments effecting a reduction of principal.

"NZD" means the currency of New Zealand.

"Period" means a term commencing immediately after a payment is payable or receivable, and ending when the next payment is payable or receivable.

"Reviewable rate arrangement" means a financial arrangement where the interest rate is set periodically in line with market rates.

"Spot rate" means the exchange rate for a spot contract as defined in Determination G6D: Foreign Currency Rates or in the case of a commodity, the spot value (in NZD) of the commodity.

"Spot value" in relation to a commodity and a day means the value of the commodity on that day derived from any commercially acceptable method of valuation.

"USD" means the currency of the United States of America.

"Variable rate financial arrangement" means a floating rate arrangement or a reviewable rate arrangement.

(3) All other terms used have the same meaning given to them for the purpose of the qualified accruals rules in the Act.

6. Method

(1) Your gross income or expenditure in an income year from a financial arrangement under this determination is the total of:

(A) the expected component, calculated in accordance with sub-paragraphs (2) to (5); and

(B) the unexpected component, calculated in accordance with sub-paragraph (6) of this section.

(2) You must calculate the expected component for each income year of the remaining term of the financial arrangement at the time you become a party to the financial arrangement. The expected component is calculated by first taking into account all base currency payments in relation to the financial arrangement.

(3) You must calculate the base currency payments of a variable rate financial arrangement denominated in a currency other than NZD using the initial interest rate and assuming that this rate will apply throughout the term of the financial arrangement.

(4) You must convert the base currency payments into NZD using forward rates at the time you became a party to the financial arrangement.

(5) You must spread the expected NZD net amount using the yield to maturity method consistent with Determination G3 and, where necessary, allocate it to the income year on the basis of Determination G1A. This will give the expected component for each income year.

(6) The unexpected component is the difference between the actual NZD value of the payments during the year and the expected NZD value of those payments as calculated under sub-paragraph (4).

Transitional Adjustment for Existing Financial Arrangements

(7) If you elect to use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure of any financial arrangement entered into before the income year you made the election, you must follow the method set out in sub-paragraphs (1) to (6) to calculate gross income or expenditure of these financial arrangements, except that

(a) the NZD net amount to be spread under sub-paragraph (5) consists of actual NZD payments that have occurred since you become a party to the financial arrangement until the end of the income year you elect to use this determination, and expected NZD payments in the remaining term of the financial arrangement; and

(b) the expected NZD payments in the remaining term of the financial arrangement must be calculated on the basis of the forward rates available at the end of the income year you elect to use this determination.

(8) You must perform a transitional adjustment calculation in the income year in which you elect to use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure of any financial arrangement entered into before the income year you made the election. You must perform the transitional adjustment calculation for each of those financial arrangements in accordance with the following formula:

- a is the sum of all amounts that would have been income in respect of the financial arrangement from the time it was entered into until the end of the income year, if this determination was applied from the time you become a party to the financial arrangement;
- b is the sum of all amounts that would have been expenditure in respect of the financial arrangement from the time was entered into until the end of the income year, if this determination was applied from the time you become a party to the financial arrangement;
- c is the sum of all income in respect of the financial arrangement since it was acquired until the end of the previous income year;
- d is the sum of all expenditure in respect of the financial arrangement since it was acquired until the end of the previous income year.

A positive net amount is gross income while a negative net amount is gross expenditure in the income year you elect to use this determination.

7. Examples

(1) A New Zealand investor holds a United States Treasury Bond on its balance date of 30 June 2000. The bond has a term of 5 years and bears 10% interest payable semi-annually on 1 September and 1 March. It has a face value of USD $10 million. The bond was purchased at issue for USD $8,300,000 and matures on 1 September 2004.

(2) The New Zealand investor has to calculate the expected NZD net amount on the basis of forward rates available at the time it becomes a party to the financial arrangement. It then has to spread and allocate the expected NZD net amount to the income years over the term of the financial arrangement in accordance with Determination G3 and Determination G1A. In each of those income years, the investor also has to determine the unexpected component of the gross income or expenditure. The unexpected component is measured as the difference between the actual NZD payments and the expected NZD payments.

Signed on the 27th day of April 1998.

ROBIN OLIVER, General Manager, Policy.

Determination G14A: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities: An Expected Value Approach

This determination may be cited as "Determination G14A: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities: An Expected Value Approach".

1. Explanation (which does not form part of the determination)

What is a Forward Contract for Foreign Exchange and Commodities?

A forward contract for foreign exchange or commodities is a contract to buy or sell specified amounts of foreign currency or commodities at some future date at a specified contract rate. For example, a forward contract for foreign currency is a contract to buy or sell specified amounts of a currency at a future date at a price fixed (in terms of another currency) at the time the contract is entered into. Each party contracts simultaneously to sell one currency and purchase another currency. The same forward contract can always be viewed as either the sale of one currency or the purchase of the other currency. For example, a person who sells NZD forward against purchase of USD can view the contract as either—

The forward sale of NZD; or

The forward purchase of USD.

A forward contract has characteristics that are very similar to a swap contract. In fact, swaps are often structured as a series of forward contracts. If you are a party to a swap, however, you may not apply this determination as swaps are subject to Determination G27. The only exception is a swap contract for fixed amounts, to be exchanged at a single fixed date. This type of swap is, in substance, a forward contract. Therefore, if you are a party to this type of financial arrangement, you have to apply this determination instead of Determination G27.

What methods can be used to calculate income or expenditure under a Forward Contract for Foreign Exchange and Commodities?

Expected Value Approach

This determination sets out an expected value approach to calculate gross income or expenditure from a forward contract. This expected value approach can only be used for forward contracts within the scope of this determination, which is narrower than Determination G14: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities. If you elect to use this determination, you must not use Determination G14 for any such forward contract, and you must not use Determination G9A: Financial Arrangements that are Denominated in a Currency or Commodity other than New Zealand Dollars for any financial arrangement within the scope of Determination G9B: Financial Arrangements that are Denominated in a Currency other than New Zealand Dollars: An Expected Value Approach.

Mark to Spot Approach

You can use Determination G14: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities to calculate gross income or expenditure of any forward contract within the scope of this determination if you have not used this determination or Determination G9B: Financial Arrangements that are Denominated in a Currency Other than New Zealand Dollars: An Expected Value Approach.

Alternatively, you may use the mark to market method if you satisfy the requirements of section EH 1 (6) of the Act.

You may also use a method allowed by the proviso to section EH 1 (5) (a) of the Act.

How do I use the method set out in this determination?

Under this method, the gross income or expenditure from a forward contract is the total of an expected component and an unexpected component. A typical forward contract drawn at the forward rate for no consideration, however, has no expected component. To apply this method:

- ignore any offsetting of payments between the parties, so that every amount that would be payable under the forward contract is taken into account under this determination.
- choose one of the currencies under the forward contract as a base currency.
- determine the expected component by taking into account all the base currency payments and payment dates in relation to the forward contract when you become a party to the contract.

- the base currency payments in relation to the forward contract consist of:
 - (a) the base currency value of the payment or receipt, if any, made in consideration of entering into the contract;
 - (b) the base currency value of the non-base currency payment to be made under the contract valued at the forward rate; and
 - (c) the base currency value of the non-base currency payment to be made under the contract valued at the contract rate.
- convert the expected base currency payments, where the base currency is not NZD, into expected NZD payments on the basis of forward rates available at the time you become a party to the forward contract.
- spread the expected NZD net amount over the term of the forward contract.
- calculate the gross income or expenditure of a forward contract entered into before the income year you elect to use this determination as set out above, except that you must:
 - (a) use actual NZD payments up to the income year you elect to use this determination and expected NZD payments for the remaining term of the financial arrangement in determining the expected component of the gross income or expenditure; and
 - (b) use the relevant forward rates at the end of the income year you elect to use this determination for the purpose of calculating the expected NZD payments.
- perform the base price adjustment under section EH 4 of the Act when the forward contract you are a party to matures or is disposed of. This adjustment contains the unexpected component of the gross income or expenditure of the forward contract.

How do I elect to use the method outlined in this determination?

You may elect to use this determination by returning your gross income or expenditure on the basis of this determination for the 1998–1999 income year, or the 1999–2000 income year, or in the first income year in which you become a party to any forward contract that is within the scope of this determination.

In the income year you elect to use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure from a forward contract entered into before the income year, you must perform a transitional adjustment calculation. This determination provides for a transitional adjustment calculation that is comparable to Determination G25: Variations in the Terms of a Financial Arrangement.

How do I calculate the transitional adjustment?

The transitional adjustment must be made in the income year you elect to use this determination. The transitional adjustment calculation must be made for each forward contract entered into before the income year you elect to use this determination. It requires that you treat the difference between the total amount that would have been gross income or expenditure calculated as described in this determination and the total amount actually recognised over the previous income years, as gross income or expenditure in the income year of the adjustment.

How is income or expenditure calculated in the year the forward contract matures or is disposed of?

Regardless of which method you choose to use, you must calculate income or expenditure under the base price adjustment in section EH 4 of the Act.

If you are a party to a forward contract, you are both a vendor and a purchaser. As such, you are a holder under the definition of “holder” in section OB 1 of the Act. This categorisation is important for the purpose of calculating income or expenditure in accordance with section EH 4 of the Act.

2. Reference

This determination is made pursuant to section 90 (1) (c) of the Tax Administration Act 1994.

3. Scope

(1) This determination applies to the calculation of gross income or expenditure from a forward contract for foreign exchange and commodities.

(2) This determination will not apply to—

- (a) A futures contract;
- (b) A security arrangement;
- (c) A forward contract for foreign exchange and commodities where the forward rates of the currency cannot be determined; or
- (d) Any financial arrangements covered by the following determinations—
 - Determination G19: Exchange Traded Option Contracts;
 - Determination G20: Discounted Value of Amounts Payable in Relation to Trade Credits Denominated in a Foreign Currency;
 - Determination G21: Discounted Value of Amounts Payable in Relation to Deferred Property Settlements Denominated in a Foreign Currency;
 - Determination G21A: Agreements for Sale and Purchase of Property Denominated in Foreign Currency: Discounted Value of Amounts Payable;
 - Determination G27: Swaps;
 - Determination G29: Agreements for Sale and Purchase of Property Denominated in Foreign Currency: Exchange Rate to Determine the Acquisition Price and Method for Spreading Income and Expenditure;

except as specifically allowed by those determinations.

(3) You may use this determination if

- (a) an election to use this determination is made by returning your income or expenditure on the basis of this determination in the 1998–1999 income year or the 1999–2000 income year or the first income year in which you become a party to a forward contract within sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) above; and
- (b) Determination G14: Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities is not used to calculate gross income or expenditure of any forward contract that is within sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) above; and
- (c) Determination G9A: Financial Arrangements that are Denominated in a Currency or Commodity other than New Zealand Dollars is not used to calculate gross income or expenditure of any financial arrangement that is within the scope of Determination G9B: Financial Arrangements that are Denominated in a Currency or Commodity other than New Zealand Dollars: An Expected Value Approach.

(NOTE: A determination to which Determination G14A refers may be changed or rescinded by a new determination made by the Commissioner. In such a case, a reference to the old determination is extended to the new determination.)

4. Principle

(1) If you are a party to a forward contract to which this determination applies, the gross income or expenditure in respect of the forward contract is calculated by taking into account all amounts arising from the fluctuations of exchange rates or commodity prices.

(2) The gross income or expenditure from the forward contract is the total of an expected component and the unexpected component. You must measure the expected component at the time you become a party to the forward contract. You must also recognise the unexpected component by performing the base price adjustment required under section EH 4 of the Act.

(3) To measure the expected component you must convert the base currency payments into expected NZD payments on the basis of forward rates at the time you become a party to the forward contract, and spread the expected NZD net amount over the term of the contract.

(4) You may use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure of forward contracts entered into before the income year in which you made the election and in respect of which section EH 4 of the Act does not apply. You must then use this determination for all such forward contracts. In this case, you must follow the principle set out above except that you must calculate the expected NZD net amount using actual NZD payments up to the end of the income year in which you elect to use this determination and the forward rates at the end of that income year.

Transitional Adjustment

(5) You must perform the transitional adjustment calculation in the income year in which you elect to use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure of any forward contract entered into before that income year.

(6) This adjustment ensures that the gross income or expenditure up to the end of the income year in which you elect to use this determination is equal to that that would have been returned if the actual NZD payments and the forward rates, as described in sub-paragraph (4), were known and this determination had been used since you become a party to the forward contract.

5. Interpretation

In this determination:

(1) A reference to the "Act" is a reference to the Income Tax Act 1994.

(2) "Base currency" in relation to a person and a forward contract, means the currency under the forward contract which is adopted by the person as a reference currency for the purposes of this determination.

"Commencement date" of a forward contract means the date on which the contract was entered into, or the date on which it was acquired, if later.

"Contract rate", in relation to a forward contract means the price of one currency expressed in terms of the other currency under the forward contract.

"Covered interest parity" means the theoretical proposition that the differential between forward and spot exchange rates is equal to the interest differentials. That is, the forward rate for a foreign currency exchange at time t for 1 period ahead is equivalent to the spot rate at time t , S_t , multiplied by one plus the foreign interest rate, i_f , divided by one plus the domestic interest rate, i_d . Forward rates at time t for n periods, $Fwd_{t,n}$, can thus be derived based on the principle of covered interest parity as:

$$Fwd_{t,n} = S_t \frac{(1 + i_f)^n}{(1 + i_d)^n}$$

"Currency" includes any commodity used as a medium of exchange or account, whether in general use or for the purpose of an arrangement.

"Exchange rate" means the price of one currency expressed in another currency.

"Forward rate" means the exchange rate for a forward contract as defined in Determination G6D: Foreign Currency Rates or the forward exchange rate calculated using the principle of covered interest parity or other methods that are commercially acceptable. In the case of a forward contract for commodities, the forward rate is the future value of the commodities (in NZD).

"Future value" in relation to a commodity and a future date means the value of the commodity at the future date, on a given date, derived from any commercially acceptable, market-based method of valuation.

"NZD" means the currency of New Zealand.

"Non-base currency" means the currency under a forward contract that is not the base currency.

"Spot contract" means a contract for the sale or purchase of a currency for delivery in 2 business days.

"Spot rate" means the exchange rate for a spot contract as defined in Determination G6D: Foreign Currency Rates or in the case of a commodity, the spot value (in NZD) of the commodity.

"Spot value" in relation to a commodity and a day means the value of the commodity on that day derived from any commercially acceptable method of valuation.

"USD" means the currency of the United States of America.

(3) All other terms used have the same meaning given to them for the purpose of the qualified accruals rules in the Act.

6. Method

(1) Your gross income or expenditure in an income year from a forward contract under this determination is the total of:

(A) the expected component, calculated in accordance with sub-paragraphs (4) to (7); and

(B) the unexpected component, calculated in accordance with sub-paragraph (8).

(2) To calculate the income or expenditure in relation to a forward contract, you must first nominate a base currency.

(3) If the terms of the forward contract provide for the netting off or offsetting of any amounts payable to or by one party to the forward contract with any amounts payable to or by the other party to the forward contract, you must ignore such netting off or offsetting for the purpose of this determination.

(4) You must calculate the expected component for each income year of the remaining term of the forward contract at the time you become a party to the contract. The expected component is calculated by first taking into account all base currency payments in relation to the forward contract. The base currency payments of a forward contract consist of:

(a) the base currency value of the payment or receipt, if any, made in consideration of entering into the forward contract;

(b) the base currency value of the non-base currency payment to be made under the contract valued at the forward rate; and

(c) the base currency value of the non-base currency payment to be made under the contract valued at the contract rate.

(5) You must convert the base currency payments into NZD using forward rates at the time you become a party to the financial arrangement, if the base currency is not NZD.

(6) The expected NZD net amount is the difference between items (b) and (c) in sub-paragraph (4), adjusted for any amount as described in item (a). You must spread the expected NZD net amount using the yield to maturity method consistent with Determination G3 and, where necessary, allocate it to the income year on the basis of Determination G1A. This will give the expected component for each income year.

(7) You must spread the expected NZD net amount of a forward contract that has been written for no consideration at a rate other than the forward rate using the straight-line method.

(8) The unexpected component is the difference between the actual NZD value of the payments during the year and the expected NZD value of those payments as calculated under sub-paragraph (5). You need not calculate the unexpected component separately as it is part of the base price adjustment required under section EH 4 of the Act.

Transitional Adjustment for Existing Forward Contracts for Foreign Exchange and Commodities

(9) If you elect to use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure of any forward contract entered into before the income year you made the election, you must follow the method set out in sub-paragraphs (1) to (8) to calculate gross income or expenditure of these contracts, except that

(a) the NZD net amount to be spread under sub-paragraph (6) consists of actual NZD payments that have occurred since you become a party to the forward contract until the end of the income year you elect to use this determination, and expected NZD payments in the remaining term of the forward contract; and

(b) the expected NZD payments in the remaining term of the forward contract must be calculated on the basis of the forward rates available at the end of the income year you elect to use this determination.

(10) You must perform a transitional adjustment calculation in the income year in which you elect to use this determination to calculate gross income or expenditure of any forward contract entered into before the income year you made the election. You must perform the transitional adjustment calculation for each of those forward contracts in accordance with the following formula:

a is the sum of all amounts that would have been income in respect of the forward contract from the time it was entered into until the end of the income year, if this determination was applied from the time you become a party to the forward contract;

b is the sum of all amounts that would have been expenditure in respect of the forward contract from the time it was entered into until the end of the income year, if this determination was applied from the time you become a party to the forward contract;

c is the sum of all income in respect of the forward contract since it was acquired until the end of the previous income year;

d is the sum of all expenditure in respect of the forward contract since it was acquired until the end of the previous income year.

A positive net amount is gross income while a negative net amount is gross expenditure in the income year you elect to use this determination.

7. Examples

(1) A New Zealand corporate borrower enters into a long term forward foreign exchange contract to buy 1 million US dollars (USD) against delivery of New Zealand dollars (NZD) in 2 years time. The contract was entered into on 30 April 1999 for no consideration and the corporate borrower has a balance date of 30 June. The contract rate is 0.5919 USD to 1 NZD, so settlement will require delivery of NZD $1,689,475. The corporate chooses NZD as the base currency for this contract.

(2) At the time the New Zealand corporate becomes a party to the forward contract, the expected NZD net amount is zero and so the expected component of the gross income or expenditure from the forward contract is zero. The New Zealand corporate will recognise the unexpected component of the gross income or expenditure from the forward contract when performing the base price adjustment under section EH 4 of the Act.

Crimes Act 1961

Reference to the Court of Appeal of the Question of the Convictions of Peter Hugh McGregor Ellis for Sexual Offences Against Children

THOMAS EICHELBAUM, Administrator of the Government

ORDER IN COUNCIL

At Wellington this 4th day of May 1998

Present:

HIS EXCELLENCY THE ADMINISTRATOR OF THE GOVERNMENT IN COUNCIL

His Excellency the Administrator of the Government, acting under section 406 (a) of the Crimes Act 1961 and by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council, refers the question of the 13 convictions of Peter Hugh McGregor Ellis for sexual offences against children to the Court of Appeal for hearing and determination. The background to, and the reasons for, the reference appear in the Schedule.

Schedule

1. Interpretation—In this Schedule, “the applicant” means Peter Hugh McGregor Ellis.

Background

2. Information about trial and appeal—(1) On 5 June 1993 the applicant was convicted in the High Court at Christchurch on 16 charges of sexual offences against 7 children who had attended the Christchurch Civic Childcare Centre.

(2) On 22 June 1993 the applicant was sentenced by the High Court at Christchurch to a total of 10 years imprisonment.

(3) On 8 September 1994 the Court of Appeal—

(a) Allowed the applicant’s appeal in respect of 3 counts relating to one child, identified as child A, who retracted her evidence during the hearing of the appeal in the Court of Appeal; and

(b) Dismissed the applicant’s appeal against the remaining 13 convictions.

3. Information about trial evidence, and statement by court on appeal—(1) Evidence at trial included evidence given by the child complainants.

(2) The child complainants were interviewed a number of times in the course of the inquiry into alleged sexual offending at the Christchurch Civic Childcare Centre.

(3) The interviews were conducted by the Specialist

Services Unit of the Department of Social Welfare under the supervision of a specialist child psychiatrist.

(4) The interviews were conducted in accordance with the Evidence (Videotaping of Child Complainants) Regulations 1990.

(5) In allowing the appeal in respect of child A, the Court of Appeal said that it was not uncommon for child complainants in sexual abuse cases to withdraw their allegations or claim they were lying.

4. Information about Dr Barry Parsonson—(1) The applicant commissioned Dr Barry Parsonson to prepare reports in support of some of the grounds in the applicant’s application for the exercise of the mercy of the Crown.

(2) Dr Barry Parsonson is a registered psychologist. He is currently employed part-time as an Associate Professor of Psychology at the University of Waikato and also works part-time as a consultant psychologist.

5. Applicant’s application for exercise of mercy of Crown—(1) The applicant made an application, received on 2 December 1997, for the exercise of the mercy of the Crown in respect of his convictions for sexual offences against children.

(2) One ground of the application is, among others, that, since the applicant’s appeal, it has become clear that the methods of obtaining evidence from the child complainants were flawed and had unacceptably high risks of contamination.

(3) The submissions in support of this ground include the submission that 3 reports by Dr Barry Parsonson relating to the techniques of interviewing children contrast, unfavourably, the techniques used in the applicant’s case with the techniques used today. The titles of the reports are set out in clause 6 (3).

(4) A further ground of the application is, among others, that, since the applicant’s appeal, it has become clear that the recantation of child A was of greater significance than the Court of Appeal had appreciated.

(5) The submissions in support of this ground include the submission that a report by Dr Barry Parsonson indicates that the process by which the retraction was dealt with was unfair and based on inadequate scientific evidence. The title of the report is set out in clause 7 (3).

(6) A further ground of the application is, among others, that, since the applicant’s appeal, it has become clear that the jury which convicted him failed to disclose that it might not be impartial and as a result he did not receive a fair trial.

(7) The submissions in support of this ground are, among others, that—

(a) The Crown witness identified as child A’s mother worked with the intimate partner of one of the jurors; and

(b) Child A’s mother and the juror’s partner worked together in a small, multi-disciplinary team in an open plan work environment; and

(c) Child A’s mother and the juror knew each other through the juror’s partner; and

(d) Given the circumstances of the case, namely a high profile, lengthy, sexual abuse case, it was unfair and unjust for the juror to have remained on the jury.

6. Documents relating to ground involving children’s evidence—(1) In support of the ground described in clause 5 (2), the applicant tendered 3 reports by Dr Parsonson.

(2) In reaching his conclusions in each report, Dr Parsonson relies, in part, on clinical studies published after the applicant's appeal.

(3) The reports are—

(a) "Comment on the Probability of contamination in 'disclosures' obtained from children in the case of R v Ellis", dated 30 November 1997, in which Dr Parsonson concludes that, in his opinion, "given the conditions prevailing, the level of parental contamination, and the extremely suggestive interviewing procedures, the probability of the proportion of fact outweighing the proportion of fiction must be very, very small indeed":

(b) "The interviewing of children: Effects of question form, props, question repetition and repeated interviews on the accuracy of children's reports. A review and commentary in respect of the Christchurch Civic Crèche interviewing and interviewers", dated 27 November 1997, in which Dr Parsonson concludes that, in his opinion, the techniques for interviewing children used in the applicant's case would not be used today:

(c) "Children's memory: A brief review of developments", dated 27 November 1997, in which Dr Parsonson concludes that, in his opinion, children, especially children under 8 years old, are susceptible to suggestion in recalling and reporting events.

7. Documents relating to ground involving retraction—(1) In support of the ground described in clause 5(4), the applicant tendered one report by Dr Parsonson.

(2) In reaching his conclusions in the report, Dr Parsonson relies, in part, on clinical studies published after the applicant's appeal.

(3) The report is "Retraction of allegations of abuse by children", dated 27 November 1997, in which Dr Parsonson, having reviewed research on interviewing and retraction, states that he cannot share the conclusion expressed in the Court of Appeal decision that it is not uncommon for child complainants to withdraw their allegations.

8. Documents relating to ground involving jury—(1) In support of the ground described in clause 5(6), the applicant tendered an affidavit by the Crown witness identified as child A's mother, dated 29 November 1997, stating, among other things,—

(a) That she knew and was known to a jury member; and

(b) That she knew that juror as the partner of a work colleague; and

(c) That during the 6 weeks of the trial there was considerable tension in the office which impacted on her relationship with the juror's partner and on the other staff; and

(d) That she reported the fact that she knew the juror to a person in authority and was told the relationship was not that strong and not to worry about it.

(2) The Ministry of Justice received a statement from the juror in question, dated 25 November 1997. The statement was unsolicited. It states, among other things,—

(a) That she served as a juror in the High Court trial of the applicant; and

(b) That she did not recognise the name of child A's mother on the list of witnesses' names; and

(c) That she did not recognise child A's mother when she gave her evidence; and

(d) That at the end of the first day of the trial she was told by her partner that a work colleague of her partner had given evidence that day; and

(e) That she raised the connection with a jury assistant who, within about half an hour, informed her that the information had been relayed to the appropriate officers of the court and told her that the association did not warrant her standing down as a juror.

(3) The Ministry of Justice received a letter from the Registrar of the High Court at Christchurch, dated 17 March 1998. The Ministry had asked the Registrar for information on matters raised in the application. The letter reports that the Registrar had found a note in the trial judge's notebook for 27 April 1993 reading—

"9.30 Mrs Hay says 1 juror says a flatmate works with mother of child".

9. Additional grounds—(1) The applicant has, subsequent to his application received on 2 December 1997, submitted further grounds for his application that are additional to the grounds described in clause 5.

(2) One further ground, among others, is that photographs that were clearly important for the defence—

(a) Existed at the time of the applicant's trial; and

(b) Were in the possession of the Crown at that time; and

(c) Were not disclosed to the defence despite a request for them being made.

(3) The applicant submits that the photographs were clearly important for the defence because—

(a) They were of the Christchurch Civic Childcare Centre in operation before the inquiry into alleged sexual offending at the centre; and

(b) They demonstrated in a compelling way that the sexual abuse that was alleged to have taken place in the toilet area was highly unlikely to have happened; and

(c) They were relevant to show that there was an innocent explanation for some of the games described by some of the children in their evidence.

(4) The applicant has indicated that he intends to provide evidence by way of affidavit to the Court of Appeal in support of the ground described in subclause (2).

(5) The Ministry of Justice received a letter from the Crown Solicitor's office at Christchurch, dated 24 April 1998. The Ministry had sought comments from the Crown Solicitor's office on the further grounds for the applicant's application. The Crown Solicitor's office, in the letter, contests the allegation of non-disclosure and the importance of the photographs.

Reasons

10. Reasons—The reasons for the reference are—

(a) That the documents described in clauses 6 and 7 indicate that evidence is available that could lead the Court of Appeal to the conclusion that a miscarriage of justice might have occurred because of the techniques used to obtain the evidence of the child complainants; and

(b) That the documents described in clause 8 indicate that evidence is available that could lead the Court of Appeal to the conclusion that a miscarriage of justice might have occurred because, if the trial judge did not know the nature of the relationship between the juror and her intimate partner, he would have been unable properly to assess the closeness of the connection between the juror and the Crown witness; and

(c) That, if the applicant establishes that the photographs described in clause 9 were not disclosed to his counsel at trial, this could lead the Court of Appeal to the conclusion that a miscarriage of justice might have occurred because photographs that the applicant considers would have been important to the defence were not disclosed to it.

BOB MACFARLANE, Clerk of the Executive Council.
