PUBLIC NOTIFICATION.

Superintendent's Office,
Auckland, 26th March, 1868.

THE following Report, upon the Navigation, Trade, and present condition of the Fiji Islands, for the year 1867, has been received, and is published for general information.

J. WILLIAMSON,
Superintendent.

REPORT UPON THE NAVIGATION, TRADE, AND PRESENT CONDI- TION OF THE FIJI ISLANDS.

THERE has been a slight decrease in the aggregate tonnage of shipping visiting the ports of Levuka and Rewa, during the past year.

This can be partly accounted for by the withdrawal of one or two ships from the trade, and to their being replaced by vessels of less capacity, but better adapted to insular navigation.

The trade of this group is at present carried on by British vessels, sailing from ports in the adjoining colonies.

The following statement shews the number of ships and gross tonnage entered, compared with last year:—

	1866.	1867.
British ships entered	27	24
Foreign „ „	3	1
Gross tonnage	4,024	3,797

During the past year three small vessels have been built, measuring respectively 30, 40, 45 tons.

The number of small craft, belonging chiefly to British residents, occupied in island traffic, amount at the present time to 18, measuring in the aggregate about 350 tons.

As the cultivation of cotton and other products, now engaging the attention of the settlers, progresses, it will be necessary to build or purchase other small vessels, for the purpose of collecting the various articles from outlying districts, where it would not be safe or expedient for a large ship to proceed.

There is a prospect of an enterprising Sydney firm despatching a ship direct from this port to London or Liverpool, during the coming year. Not having a recognised Government at Fiji, there are no port charges, dues, or imposts of any nature.

The navigation of the group is open with safety from April until December, during which time the South-east trade winds prevail. From January until April the winds are variable, frequently blowing with great violence from the North and North-west, attended with heavy rains.

COMMERCE.

The following comparative table will indicate the progress this group has made during the past year:—

ARTICLE.	1865.		1866.		1867.
	Amount.	Value.	Amount.	Value.	Amount.	Value.
Cotton	2,400	£ 9,200	5,889	£ 19,800	7,586	£ 34,004
Cocoa Nut Oil	500	11,000	450	9,000	150	3,260
Beche-de-Mer	500	1,200	300	600	880	1,600
Wool	10,120	400	8,396	320	469	134
Tortoise shell	750	375	2,000	1,000	1,700	812
Coir	50	1,500	nil.	256	nil.	150
Eggs, Fruit, &c.		500
		£24,175		£36,970		£39,960

In addition to the above return are cash remittances, the amount of which cannot be estimated.

The Imports do not exceed, so far as I can ascertain, the estimate formed for the year 1866.

However, during the past year, many of the immigrants from the adjoining Colonies are of a class possessing some means, and have imported a considerable amount of trade and barter on their own account.

The total value of Imports may approximate:

By Traders	£26,000
Settlers	3,000
	<hr/> 29,000

The satisfactory increase in the value of Exports, is owing to the success attending the cultivation of cotton. It will be observed by referring to the foregoing table, that coconut oil, formerly the principal export, has in quantity fallen short of what might have been expected. This, however, can be explained.

COTTON.

The expense in shipping cotton to the Colonies is excessive, and has a depressing effect upon the planter, which can only be removed by direct communication with England. This effected, I venture to predict that Fiji will rapidly rise to a position of commercial importance. At the present time, freight upon cotton to Sydney is from  $\frac{1}{2}$  to a 1d. per lb., which is about the same rate charged from conveying thence to England.

The expenses on this article, for ginning, packing, freight, and brokerage, now consigned to England, via Sydney, amounts to  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per lb.

The varieties of cotton cultivated in Fiji are three in number, viz., Kidney, Egyptian, and Sea Island, for the two former an average of 9d. and 10d. per lb. has been obtained at this port, and for the latter, 1s. per lb.

To the present time no definite report has been made by the cotton brokers regarding the quality of Fijian cotton.

Private advices speak highly of them, and place their value, according to variety, from 1s. 3d. to 3s. 6d. per lb.

OIL.

The value of exports has been greatly reduced, by the small amount of oil made, compared with former years. Two years ago, these islands suffered from a violent hurricane, the effects of which, the cocconut trees have not recovered. Intelligent natives state, the trees require at least three years to regain their vigour after these severe storms.

BECHE DE MER.

The Beche de Mer fisheries have been extended during the past year, particularly upon the Mathuata coast, situated upon the North side of Vanua Levu. The increase of value of export under this head has been large, and provided the exertions used to keep the petty chiefs from quarrelling are successful, will no doubt augment. The fish is sold here at per picul—140 lbs.—and at an average price of 36s. per picul. The market prices of this article fluctuates very much, being sometimes as high as 40s. per picul and as low as 24s. during consecutive months. It is shipped to Sydney and thence to China.

WOOL.

This article, as an export, is becoming every year. Sheep farming has hitherto resulted in disappointment to its promoters, the flocks being carried off by some disease for which the owners are unable to account. Notwithstanding the want of success hitherto attending this pursuit, large tracts of land have lately been bought by some sheep farmers from New Zealand, who intend importing their flocks next May.

The following return will show the increase of a small flock of ewes, the increasing weight of fleece, and the gross weight of the clip during three years.

Year.	Number of Sheep	Station.	Weight of Fleece.	Weight of Clip.
1863	440	Narau Island	lbs. 2,625	lbs. 1,150
1864	559		" 2,826	" 1,580
1865	530	Viti Levu	" 3,400	" 1,800

TORTOISE SHELL.

Tortoise shell is plentiful. The amount exported might be increased threefold if the Fijians were at all industrious. The value of this article has fallen greatly. A few years since it was worth 20s. per lb., now it brings in the Colonial markets 9s.

PIGS, TIMBER, FRUIT, &c.

Very little has been exported under this head owing to the influx of settlers during the year past. Everything the Native producer could raise in the way of food, either animal or vegetable, has scarcely sufficed to meet their requirements.

For the same reason no timber has been exported. The whole being used here for the numerous additions and improvements to the houses of the settlers. Some fruit has been exported, also maize, the latter grows very finely, and is consumed chiefly by the servants and labourers on the various plantations.

The coming year will no doubt see these Islands advance steadily in the path of prosperity. Large sums of money have lately been invested by men possessing the means to enter extensively into agricultural pursuits. A company is in the course of formation for the purpose of cultivating sugar in the Island of Taviuni, the soil of which is peculiar in richness and fertility. From the high opinion competent judges entertain of the sugar cane now grown by the Natives, no doubt can be entertained of the success that will attend the undertaking.

AGRICULTURE.

Under this head it is satisfactory to report some improvement. In cotton more care is now taken in the selection of seed, in the preparation of the ground, and cultivating the plant. The best season for planting cotton is from September to January. The months of July and August are generally dry, enabling the planter to uproot and burn off the weeds upon his land, and to prepare it for the genial rains of September and October. In dry months the sun is likely to strike through the soil and so injure the roots of the young plants, thus producing the disease known as "shore skin." This retards the growth of the tree. If heavy rains fall soon after planting, the seed is very liable to rot in the ground, so in many cases, owing to unpropitious weather, infinite trouble must be endured before the planter can obtain a stand of cotton. The plant appears about four days after sowing, and under favourable circumstances grows rapidly.

Sea Island cotton is generally planted in rows 6ft. by 6ft., but some planters are drilling, as in America, the rows being 5ft. and the plants 30in. apart. This variety grows much faster and arrives at maturity sooner than any other. I have observed the first blossoms upon a tree one month after planting: at the end of the second month the blossoms fell and the bolls appeared: at the end of the third month the bolls reached maturity, and the cotton was ready for gathering. The most experienced growers estimate each healthy tree will produce annually five pounds weight of seed cotton. There are three crops of this variety during the year: the first in January or February, the second in May or June, the third in September or October. The vicissitudes of the seasons, however, will forward or retard the ripening of the crop by a month. In ginning, this cotton loses two-thirds of its gross weight; 300 lbs. of seed cotton producing 100 lbs. of clean. Assuming that each tree would produce three pounds of seed cotton—one pound of clean fibre—one shilling, and that an acre of land planted 6ft. by 6ft., carries 1,031 trees the gross value annually per acre would be £51. 11s.

The demand for Sea Island cotton is limited, but the diminished production of this variety in America, owing to the disorganization of labour, will probably afford the Fijian planter an opportunity of selling all he can produce at a remunerative figure for some time to come.

The Kidney and Egyptian cotton is of much larger growth, requiring to be planted 12ft. by 12ft. It is sown in the same months as the Sea Island. The picking season is in July. A second and lighter crop can be gathered in December. The average yield of this cotton is 1,200 lbs. per acre, yielding about 350 lbs. of clean fibre, the value of which, in Fiji, is about £15 sterling. All varieties of cotton in Fiji are perennial.

The number of bales leaving Fiji during the present season will be 2,500, of which 90 will be Sea Island; thus the remainder say 2,400, will consist of the less valuable varieties, Egyptian, &c. &c.

A bale of cotton weighs 350 lbs. which stated as above is the produce of an acre.

I estimate the land at present in cultivation by Europeans, as follows:—

Acres in cotton—No of bales of lbs. 350	2,400
Acres in cotton, coffee, corn, beans, yams, and vegetables generally, $\frac{1}{3}$	800
Acres cleared and in course of cultivation	1,500
Total in cultivation	4,700
Estimated area of land held by Europeans	160,000
Uncultivated	155,300

The cultivation is carried on by labourers obtained from the neighbouring islands. The implements used are large knives and hoes. Like all Polynesian races, these people prefer sitting to standing, whilst at any occupation, therefore they cannot be induced to work with hoes or spades, unless they be perfect toys. Nevertheless a fair amount of work is done, provided they are judiciously managed, well fed and cared for.

The expense in cultivating land in Fiji, is the same as stated in the report of 1866.

Three years back there were only two cotton gins and windmill in all Fiji; at the present date there are about thirty gins, and five steam engines.

For short stapled cottons the saw gins are preferred, and for the longer, "knife gins."

In the import of agricultural implements there is also an increase, several ploughs, harrows, and cultivators being now in use; for the working of which and for breeding purposes, seven horses and thirty-five head of cattle have been imported within the last few months.

POPULATION.

The white population is steadily increasing. The following statement shows the number of residents subject to civilized authority.

Various Nationalities.	40	1	2	43
Total American.	54	22	63	139
American Half Castes.	23	21	57	101
Americans	31	1	6	38
Total British.	337	108	204	649
British Half Castes.	85	63	90	238
British.	252	45	114	411
	Men ..	Women ..	Children ..	Total ...

The native population of Fiji may be roughly estimated at 100,000: they are, however, rapidly decreasing.

I have received the following authentic information of the births and deaths at three towns during the past year. The first town is situated upon the Island of Ovalau, which contains the principal port of the group, and is the residence of the greater portion of the white people. The second is at Sosi, a division of Bau, at which place only a mission family resides permanently, but Europeans call there daily. The third is Ba, upon the north-west coast of Viti Levu, where no Europeans reside and visitors are rare.

Town.	Died.	Born	of which Died.
Tai - -	41	7	7
Sosi - -	27	7	4
Ba - -	60	nil.	nil.

A very few years ago the Island of Ovalou could send out 3000 fighting men, now it could only muster 500 by including the lads and old men. This is not a solitary example, the ruined and deserted villages throughout the country bear testimony to the disappearance of the race.
